

2021 LEGISLATIVE SESSION: What to know, bills to watch

By TYLER FENWICK
tylerf@indyrecorder.com

The state legislature returned to session Jan. 4 with much to figure out over the next few months. Legislators will debate appropriate responses to the COVID-19 pandemic, and they'll be responsible for drawing the boundaries for legislative districts since 2020 was a census year. Plus, state lawmakers will have to present a two-year budget to Republican Gov. Eric Holcomb.

New Conviction Integrity Unit will try to right wrongs

Kendrick Morris had just finished reading his Bible at Wabash Valley Correctional Facility when a correction officer walked by to take a head count.

She asked if Morris had been praying. He said yes.

"Well, pack your stuff," she told him. "You're out of here."

It was Aug. 10, 2020. Morris kept believing the day was coming when he would be released from prison, where he maintained his innocence for 18 years.

Morris was convicted of attempted murder, aggravated battery and unlawful possession of a firearm by a serious violent felon in 2002 after a 13-year-old girl identified him as one of the people who shot her through a screen door at her home in April 2001. Morris was sentenced to 60 years in prison.

In 2015, the girl said a detective pressured her into identifying Morris as one of the shooters, and Morris filed a petition arguing her statement warranted a new trial. An appeals court decided the girl's new testimony failed a nine-part test, including that it would "probably produce a different result at retrial," so his sentence was upheld.

Morris' attorney, Fran Watson, who started the Wrongful Conviction Clinic at Indiana University's law school, then went to the Marion County Prosecutor's Office, which helped get Morris out of prison with a sentence modification. "That whole day was surreal," Morris said of the day he was released. "I always knew it was coming."

The fact is Morris, now 44 years old, wasn't the only person sitting behind bars because of a wrongful conviction. Marion County Prosecutor Ryan Mears knows there are others. The hard part is finding them and then mounting enough evidence to convince the court to exonerate that person.

By HILARY POWELL

A prominent lawmaker wants to make sure the final days of Dr. Susan Moore's life, which were chronicled in an emotional video, lead to lasting change for Black women across Indiana.

So she's drafting a bill that would require cultural awareness training for the state's health care professionals.

"I don't want another Black woman to have to go through this," said Rep. Robin Shackleford, D-Indianapolis. "We need to do whatever we can to make sure our patients and our Black women are not feeling even more stressed when they go to the hospital."

Moore, 52, died of complications from COVID-19 in late December, after alleging racial bias in her care at IU Health North Hospital. A video that she made from her hospital bed went viral on social media, drawing comments from doctors, public health experts and Vice President-elect Kamala Harris.

In the Dec. 4 video, Moore said she was treated "like a drug addict" by a white doctor when she asked for pain medication. She died weeks later, after being moved to a different hospital.

After learning about the death, Shackleford got to work on a bill she's wanted to pen for months.

Moore was her muse. Shackleford, who chairs the Indiana Black Legislative Caucus, said her bill would require Hoosier health care professionals to complete two hours of cultural awareness and competence training each year.

A draft of the bill requires the

Holcomb's vision for 2021 focuses on 'equity, policing and COVID-19'

By BREANNA COOPER

Gov. Eric Holcomb has a busy year ahead of him. In a roundtable discussion Jan. 5, Holcomb laid out his plans for 2021 and his thoughts on the national Republican Party.

Avoiding the controversy tied to several Republican leaders throughout the country following a leaked phone call between President Donald Trump and Georgia Secretary of State Brad Raffensperger, Holcomb said he had not listened to the tape of Trump asking Raffensperger "to find" votes in his state.

"I've seen reports, but I tend to focus on my day and night job, which keeps me busy," Holcomb said. "My vision for the party doesn't necessarily extend outside our state borders."

Holcomb's focus for 2021 includes equity, policing and COVID-19.

EQUITY

Karrah Herring will assume her role as Indiana's first diversity officer in February. Holcomb announced the creation of the position, which will focus on systemic issues within state agencies, in August 2020. Holcomb announced Herring as his choice to fill the position in November 2020.

"The agencies have shared not just my excitement but my goal to remove those barriers and hurdles that might be in front of them from a state agency perspective," Holcomb said. "I'm really looking forward to Hoosiers meeting Karrah."

POLICE

While Holcomb has said in previous interviews with the Recorder he isn't in favor of defunding the police, he said his administration is taking steps to determine possibilities for change within departments.

Holcomb said during the roundtable a third party is evaluating the Indiana Law Enforcement Academy and recommendations for potential changes will come in the spring. All

The Marion County Prosecutor’s Office will soon have a team dedicated to doing that work through the Conviction Integrity Unit, which will include an attorney, investigator and paralegal. People will be able to submit referrals for the unit to consider, starting this year.

“If there’s something out there, we want to know about it,” Mears said.

There will also be an advisory board that the Conviction Integrity Unit will report to quarterly, Mears said. Those reports will include why the unit did or didn’t pursue certain cases.

The Conviction Integrity Unit will try to get exonerations, meaning the court vacates the conviction. The easiest example of that happening would be if there was DNA evidence to show the person convicted didn’t actually commit the crime, though that can still be a lengthy process. Morris’ sentence modification means he is still technically a convicted felon, and he has two years of non-reporting probation.

If the Conviction Integrity Unit works the way it should, that would likely mean African Americans would see the biggest benefit.

Almost half of known exonerations since 1989 —

2,708 in total — have been for African Americans, according to the National Registry of Exonerations at the University of Michigan law school. That’s partly because African Americans are seven times more likely to be wrongfully convicted of murder if the victim was white.

“It justifies why we’re doing what we’re doing,” said Rev. David Greene, who leads Concerned Clergy of Indianapolis and became an advocate for Morris. He and Watson worked with Mears to launch the Conviction Integrity Unit because of what happened to Morris.

Based on other similarly sized units around the country, Mears estimated the unit could receive 60 to 80 referrals per year and investigate 15 to 20. The pace depends on how much information the unit has to work with from the referral, as well as how quickly the unit can interview witnesses, review trial transcripts and do everything else that goes into an investigation.

Watson said one of the big benefits with an integrity unit is it can go through the discovery process without filing another lawsuit, which the court may not agree to hear.

Integrity units are a good line of defense, Watson said, especially once it becomes apparent the court doesn’t want to revisit a case anymore.

“You wouldn’t need a unit to check integrity if all the convictions had integrity,” she said.

Morris, who went to Fort Wayne after his release but has since moved to Indianapolis for a job in Greenfield, said he thinks there are “a lot” of innocent people behind bars. He blames a criminal justice system that emphasizes wins and losses for attorneys rather than prioritizing justice.

“They’ll try to fit a round peg into a square hole,” he said.

Morris said he’d like to get an exoneration and compensation for the time he did in prison, but he also knows what it means to be patient and persistent.

His goal is to start a trucking company because it’s a trade that tends to be friendlier for people with criminal records. Morris said his long-term vision is to be of service to others.

state troopers will have body cameras by spring, on track with Holcomb’s goals from 2020.

“I’m bullish on the fact that our legislative peers upstairs ... have an equal appetite to make some progress on this front as well,” Holcomb said.

With the 2021 legislative session currently in session, Holcomb said he looks forward to looking through legislation. One proposed bill related to the Indianapolis Metropolitan Police Department (IMPD), put forth by Republican state Sens. Jack Sandlin and Scott Baldwin, would create a five-person board to oversee IMPD. If passed, Mayor Joe Hogsett would sit on the board alongside four members appointed by Holcomb.

Holcomb said he hasn’t had an opportunity to read or discuss the bill, so his support of the legislation is “to be determined.”

Karrah Herring

COVID-19

“This past year was unlike any other, and I’m not trying to make excuses for myself,” Holcomb said regarding his regrets from 2020. Citing the number of lives lost — over 8,000 Hoosiers have died of the virus since March 2020 — the governor wishes he had been more expressive early on about the efficacy of wearing a mask. Holcomb also said he regrets walking into a Brown County restaurant maskless early in the pandemic and the incident lingered with him throughout the year and his reelection campaign.

“Forgetting isn’t an excuse,” Holcomb said. “It was stupid on my part and I took that as a real lesson.”

With vaccines available for frontline health care workers and long-term care facility residents, the administration will announce shortly the rollout plan for other groups. He said he wanted to make sure they had the “infrastructure” in place before making any announcements.

LOOKING AHEAD

Holcomb’s biggest goal for 2021 is investing in Hoosiers and ensuring workers have the tools and resources they need to “skill up” and determine their individual career goals.

“That requires us to make investments in our infrastructure and how we relate to markets around the world,” Holcomb said.

state health department to establish the training program to show how ethnicity, religion, language, sexual orientation and gender identity can impact a patient’s health care. It also requires the state to gather statistics from health care facilities on race, ethnicity, sex, primary language and disability status — a move to help public health experts identify disparity trends and gaps in care.

Shackleford said the cost for cultural competency training would be covered by a nominal $5 fee from each health care professional.

A 2020 report from the Indiana Health Disparities Task Force found Black and Latinx communities are being hit hard by the virus. The Indiana Black Legislative Caucus said in October 18.7% of the deaths were Black Hoosiers and more than 20% were Latinx. Many issues are involved, including the fact that patients of color have long emergency room wait times and experience discrimination in care.

“It just gives you a feeling of just discontent, discouragement and just being dissatisfied with our system,” Shackleford said.

Meanwhile, two separate reviews are underway at IU Health concerning Moore’s care.

In addition to an internal review, IU Health CEO Dennis Murphy said in a statement outside experts will examine her complaints. He said the health system “will have a diverse panel of healthcare and diversity experts conduct a thorough medical review of Dr. Moore’s concerns to address any potential treatment bias.”

A spokesperson for IU Health said as of Jan. 1, three of the IU Health board of directors are members of color, though the website has not been updated to reflect all members.

This week, IBLC released a statement regarding IU Health’s response, calling Moore’s case “absolutely inexcusable. We cringe at the thought of what happens to other Black women who lack the same access.”

Dr. Omolara Uwemedimo of New Hyde Park, New York, said Black women often experience “medical racism.” In 2019, she created the company Melanin, Medicine & Motherhood to help Black women in medicine and academia cope with workplace bias, microaggressions and discrimination.

When Uwemedimo heard about the death of her “sister-doc,” she took to Twitter to mourn, saying Moore’s “story is marred by systemic racism, even as a doctor.”

It’s why Uwemedimo refuses to enter any hospital as a patient without having her physician ID badge hanging from her neck in plain sight. When she was hospitalized last year due to burnout and stress, she donned her badge as an extra layer of agency and protection.

Without it, she worries about having to “predict” whether she’ll receive quality care.

“[There’s] sadness about this because there’s no difference between Moore and me being on that bed and that’s the terrifying part,” Uwemedimo says.

During her hospital stay, Uwemedimo said she was also denied pain medication when she requested it.

She said Black women like Moore — even in her death — have been essential for speaking out on health disparities.

“As Black women, we tend to really just continue to be disrespected, devalued, dismissed,” she said. “Dr. Moore predicted her own demise. How do we stop normalizing struggle and sacrifice? How do we start living the life we deserve?”

OPINIONS

America’s true colors

By OSEYE BOYD

I had another column planned for this week. I tried to write it while watching Congress hold a joint session to count the Electoral College vote. I knew it would be eventful, must-see TV, but I never thought it would erupt into the chaos that followed. The night before, I watched police and protesters fight. I thought that would be the extent of it: fights in the street. Arrests. Protests. Chanting. Marching. I never thought people would storm the U.S. Capitol building.

That chaos has left me so angry that I had to switch gears and share my thoughts.

Watching the livestream, I actually heard a thump. Then another. And another. The thumping, I learned, was someone trying to break the glass of the Capitol. The person was successful in breaking through two panes of glass and then opening the door to let more protesters inside the building. If this happened in another country, we would say it was a coup, the country was in disarray and the government crumbling.

Most of the time, I have a couple of days or at least hours to process my thoughts, somewhat. This time, I’m writing my column in real time as the events unfold, so things may change before this column is printed.

President Donald Trump and his ilk have been whipping people into a frenzy for most of the year, if not his entire presidency. Not only has Trump held rallies and prepped people for a time such as this, but he also fanned the flames — heck, he lit the fire — with stolen election conspiracy theories. He’s also had plenty of Republicans — implicitly or explicitly — backing his foolishness. They all bear responsibility in this mess and need to be held accountable. Not long before the Capitol break-in, Trump held a rally where he told people to protest the vote. After anarchy ensued, Trump had the nerve to tweet a request for calm and support for the Capitol police as he sat in the peaceful tranquility of the White House. Talk about a day late and a dollar short. He also sent another tweet asking for calm and reminding his supporters that they are the party of law and order.

And that’s what makes my blood boil. First, where are the rubber bullets and tear gas? Where are the police in riot gear? You would think the police would be suited and booted after the fights on the previous night. They sure would if those protesters were Black. The police response would’ve been vastly different if the protesters were Black. First of all, I seriously doubt a Black person could’ve even attempted to break the window, but if someone did, the attempt would’ve been over after the first strike. Secondly, there’s no way Black people would be walking freely in the Capitol, climbing walls and rifling through the desks of members of Congress. A person was shot and still the police didn’t escalate the situation.

Trump’s reminder about supporting law and order is proof that they support law and order when it’s not about them. They support law and order when it’s about policing Black people. Remember, these undoubtedly are the same people who, angry about lockdown orders, stormed state capitols around the country and got into confrontations with police officers. These are the same people who chant about how Blue Lives Matter when we say Black Lives Matter. Those blue lives mean nothing when they get in the way of violating the perceived rights of some white people.

We watched Black people protest throughout the summer, and these same people who are protesting now are the same ones who continually shouted that Black people need to be arrested. These are the same people who were offended and vocal about Colin Kaepernick taking a knee and disrespecting this country, the flag and service members. So, Black people can’t protest state-sanctioned murder of Black people. Fighting for our rights is offensive to a large swath of Americans. We continually have to say “peaceful protest” to get white America on our side. However, white people can protest, fight police and storm buildings when they believe their rights as Americans are in jeopardy. They believe they’re exercising their rights — defending their rights — as Americans just as their forefathers did. They’re following in the footsteps of the Founding Fathers.

This was white privilege on full display. Jan. 6, 2021, removed all doubts about who this country belongs to.

Democracy on the cliff

By LARRY SMITH

On Nov. 8, 2016, mere days after the presidential election, Tom Friedman of The New York Times quoted an immigrant friend in his column: “You Americans kick around your country like it’s a football. But it’s not a football. It’s a Fabergé egg. You can break it.” That friend, Lesley Goldwasser, moved to the U.S. from Zimbabwe in the 1980s. What is remarkable about Goldwasser’s admonition is that she had made it years before he shared it in his column. In other words, her warning was based on her observations over time, not in response to Donald Trump’s election.

We are witnessing the rigorous, reckless and intentional mishandling of our democracy. At last count, roughly a dozen senators and more than 100 congresspeople — all Republicans — planned to protest the will of the majority of voters who selected Joe Biden as president. While the predictable failure of that effort will be manifest by the time this column is published, that failure is beside the point. The fact that so many duly elected members of the House and Senate have willfully, knowingly and publicly chosen to subvert the democratic process is something that I never contemplated would take place in modern America.

To be sure, there are antecedents to such seditious acts, with the Civil War being the most prominent example. Another example is the civil rights struggles of the 1950s and 1960s, when it was common for Dixiecrats to posture about secession. Demagoguery and charlatanism have always been features of political life — in America and elsewhere. Yet, the years following the 2016 election have stunned even the most jaded and world-weary among us. What is to be done — what can be done — about the men and women who have pledged to disenfranchise tens of millions of their fellow Americans?

Under the Constitution, both houses of Congress are empowered to “punish its Members for disorderly Behavior, and, with the Concurrence of two thirds, expel a Member.” The first such expulsion occurred in 1797 when the Senate nearly unanimously voted out William Blount for conspiring against the nation. Then, shortly after the Civil War had begun, the Senate needed to decide the fate of its members who had chosen to secede — but had not resigned their seats. In 1861, Abraham Lincoln chose the symbolic date of July 4 to convene Congress. Of the original 22 senators who had voted to secede, 10 remained. The Senate voted 32-10 in favor of removing those senators for the same reason that Blount had been expelled 64 years earlier: conspiracy against the United States. Later, in February of 1862, the Senate removed four more senators for assisting the Confederacy.

While the Senate has considered such expulsions 16 additional times since 1862, no other members have been removed. (Not coincidentally, the first members of the House to be expelled were removed for taking up arms on behalf of the Confederacy. They were John B. Clark and John W. Reid of Missouri and Henry C. Burnett of Kentucky.) The road leading to traitorous behavior is short and straight. That road is paved with bad intentions, not the least of which is subversion of democracy. The remedy for these modern co-conspirators is removal from their seats of privilege.

In his seminal work, “Democracy in America,” Alexis de Tocqueville primarily expressed admiration for our system of government after he and fellow Frenchman Gustave de Beaumont traveled the country in 1831. However, Tocqueville warned about the potential for a “soft despotism” to take hold in the U.S. Unfortunately, that potential is now a reality. As I have written previously, Donald Trump’s tendency toward authoritarianism — though constrained by the separation of powers under the Constitution — is an example of what Tocqueville had in mind.

Despite their protestations to the contrary, the congresspeople who have sided with Trump are attempting a soft coup. Edmund Burke famously wrote in a letter to Thomas Mercer, “The only thing necessary for the triumph of evil is for good men to do nothing.” That may be true. But the active participation of those who have bad intentions makes it imperative for good men (and women) to do something.

This is how Black people die

By MARSHAWN WOLLEY

Dr. Susan Moore’s powerful words are both compelling and an all too real concern among large segments of the Black community in hospital settings.

These words capture the anger, frustration and distrust of the health care systems earned by years of indifference to Black bodies — especially Black women, where we need only look at a maternal and infant mortality rate that was and remains too high in our community, despite recent progress.

IU Health is the latest and most high-profile local health care system to face public scrutiny over their treatment of a Black patient — no less a doctor in their care — but it isn’t the only system that has had similar issues.

Early in the outbreak of COVID-19, the fear in our community was that local health care systems in general were sending Black people home to die. Only recently, community leaders had to intercede on the behalf of another community leader at a local hospital.

It is a shame that when Black people send their loved ones to a hospital, they must have an advocacy plan to overcome indifference to Black bodies and our pain.

We have to speak our truths about these things in order for it to get better. This is a community-wide problem, and we do ourselves a disservice to focus on one health care system. All of them are implicated.

No doubt IU Health has its side of the story. It has its truth too.

IU Health has made missteps and because Dr. Moore reminds me of my mother, I’d love nothing more than to give that entire health system a piece of my mind. But the goal isn’t screaming at the insensitivity of a comment.

The goal should be to stop Black people from dying needlessly — or even feeling like they are getting less than the care they deserve. The goal should be improving Black patient outcomes.

One approach to the goal is to address systemic racism within our local health care systems. Just over two months ago, IU Health, Eskenazi Health and Community Health Network declared racism a public health emergency and pledged to do the following:

- Address and reduce discrimination among team members, patients and guests.
- Improve the demographic makeup of organization leaders, with a particular focus on people of color.
- Improve the equity of care by regularly measuring, monitoring and improving the care provided to underserved populations.
- Identify, research, understand and address racial disparities in health care access and outcomes.
- Work with other community organizations to develop, endorse and provide support for creative solutions to social determinants of health, especially affordable housing, food security and workforce development.

To be fair, our local health care systems at a minimum have recognized that there is a problem.

IU Health, to its credit, raised its minimum wage for its employees and is targeting $15 an hour. Officials have a rather ambitious redevelopment plan for a “health district” in downtown Indianapolis and have also developed a $100 million community investment fund.

IU Health even recently partnered with Crispus Attacks on an educational initiative to improve access to health care careers.

CEO Dennis Murphy has also called for an external review of Dr. Moore’s treatment.

But from a community perspective, all of this is up against a doctor who died and a 19-year-old who lost his mother right now.

It is certainly much easier to declare racism as a public health crisis than to do the work of taking it on.

At minimum, we have learned that the work IU Health, Eskenazi Health and Community Health Network committed to is necessary and that it will take some time.

The question is how will they change their operations to meet the standards they have set for themselves? What will their boards look like? What will the leadership look like? How will they seek Black community input on their standards?

Will they be merely allies making statements and pledges or accomplices unambiguously doing the work of racial equity?

For systems that can shift to addressing COVID-19 there certainly is capacity to make changes.

Our community wants and deserves more than the pledge to be better.

What I’m hearing....

Black organizations had already planned an effort to get a deeper understanding of the meaning and the work behind the racial equity pledge three major hospital systems took back in October. The objective from Black leaders seems to be to create a space for the Black community to speak directly to the CEOs in a virtual setting.

This is no time for Black faces in high places. Many in the community missed that the hospital systems took a stance on racial health disparities and patient outcomes, so it is a necessary step in an initiative that is only months old.

The conversation about how hospitals treat Black patients is obviously connected to apprehension about the COVID-19 vaccine and the larger health care systems’ treatment of Black people and our bodies.

This needs to be a moment where we find solutions to a problem that has lasted too long. Black people deserve better when they go to the hospital.

COVID keeping you from the gym? NO PROBLEM

By BREANNA COOPER
BreannaC@indyrecorder.com

Despite efforts from gyms to sanitize and reduce crowds during the pandemic, some people still feel more comfortable working out at home. Luckily, there are ways to get in effective workouts and diet plans from home without breaking the bank, making new year fitness goals attainable.

Shaylin Pachciraz, an exercise physiologist at IU Health, said setting sensible workout goals is the best way to ensure you don't give up on your resolutions.

"It's about reframing your mindset," Pachciraz said. "This isn't just temporary; it's a lifestyle change. To start out, you need to be specific and smart with your goals and how you plan to reach them."

Pachciraz recommends investing in some workout equipment if you're exercising at home. Resistance bands and core sliders, she said, help intensify workouts. There are still ways to get effective workouts without equipment. Pachciraz recommends bodyweight workouts — such as squats and push-ups — or following YouTube tutorials for other workouts.

When it comes to getting in shape, though, exercise is only half the work. A balanced diet is also necessary to reach your new year's fitness resolutions. And while a new diet can be daunting, IU Health dietician Garrett Swisher said starting slow can make the process easier.

Instead of giving up items such as sugar and bread cold turkey, Swisher said it's best to look at your lifestyle habits and figure out what you could dial down. Cutting back on soda instead of giving it up entirely at the start makes you more likely to be successful in your new diet.

According to Swisher, one thing to leave in 2020 is the misconception that organic fruits and vegetables are necessary to a healthy diet.

"A lot of those organic, non-GMO [genetically modified organism] are hyped up to be something they aren't," Swisher said.

To cut back on cost, Swisher recommends shopping at places like Aldi, where fresh produce is cheaper, looking for deals while shopping and meal planning. By preparing a couple of meals at a time, Swisher said it's easier to ensure you're staying on track with your diet plan and makes it less likely you'll opt for takeout, saving you even more money.

The key to sticking with both a new diet and workout regimen, according to Pachciraz and Swisher, is finding things you enjoy and listening to your body.

Instead of working out for 60 minutes straight, Pachciraz suggests breaking it up into 15-minute increments throughout the day, especially if you aren't used to an active lifestyle.

"Do whatever you can to get your heart rate up every day," Pachciraz said. "Do a light jog, dance along to a video on YouTube, just find stuff you enjoy and stick with it."

Nutritional inspiration for the new year

Family Features

A new year brings new opportunities for personal changes and improvement from taking steps forward in a career to bettering personal relationships and — perhaps most common — starting on a path toward better health. For many, the worthwhile challenge of enhancing physical health begins with the foods and beverages you eat and drink.

Step one is to leave behind the habit of turning to unhealthy meals and instead focus on dishes that call for fresh fruits and veggies like this Quinoa Salad with Orange Cilantro Salad Dressing. Simply start with cooked quinoa and mix together with your preferred produce like orange slices, grapefruit and diced avocado. Add feta cheese, lime juice and diced red onion to bring the flavor to life and drizzle with the light, zesty dressing.

Making nutritious choices goes beyond just your meals, however. Take your commitment to the next level with beverages that don't cancel out your effort to eat healthy. This Spiced Citrus Ginger Mocktail combines a concentrate made of orange juice, orange peel, lime juice and lime peel with zero-sugar, zero-calorie ginger ale.

These health-conscious recipes are made possible with the flavor enhancement of Zevia beverages, which are naturally sweetened with stevia and include no artificial ingredients, colors or preservatives. Ranging from sodas to organic teas, energy drinks, sparkling water and mixers for cocktails and mocktails, the zero-sugar beverages fit nearly any lifestyle including eating patterns like paleo, keto, intermittent fasting and gluten-free.

Religious leaders worldwide, across faiths who died in 2020

Joseph Lowery speaks at the 50th anniversary of the March on Washington where Martin Luther King Jr., spoke, at the Lincoln Memorial in Washington. NEW YORK (AP) — The Catholic priest who for decades had been one of the Vatican's top experts on the Latin language died on Christmas Day at a nursing home in Milwaukee. A United Methodist Church bishop in the West African nation of Sierra Leone died in a traffic accident in August as he was engaged in efforts to resolve the denomination's conflicts over inclusion of LGBTQ people. Back in March, a 49-year-old priest in Brooklyn became the first Catholic cleric in the United States killed by the coronavirus. They were among many religious leaders — some admired worldwide, others beloved only locally — who died in 2020. Here are some of them.

Bishop Phillip A. Brooks, 88, senior pastor of New St. Paul Tabernacle Church of God in Christ in Detroit and second-in-command in the Black denomination's national leadership. Official obituaries did not specify the cause of Brooks' death. It occurred in April, during a period in which numerous Church of God in Christ bishops and pastors died of COVID-19.

Ernesto Cardenal, 95, a renowned poet and Roman Catholic cleric who became a symbol of revolutionary verse in Nicaragua and across Latin America. He was suspended from performing his priestly duties by St. John Paul II for defying the Church by serving as a cabinet minister in the Sandinista government. The penalty lasted more than three decades before being lifted by Pope Francis in February 2019.

Thich Quang Do, 91, a Buddhist monk who became the public face of religious dissent in Vietnam while the Communist government kept him in prison or under house arrest for more than 20 years. Do was the highest leader of the banned Unified Buddhist Church of Vietnam, which has constantly tangled with the government over religious freedom and human rights.

Reginald Foster, 81, a Milwaukee-born Catholic priest who for 40 years served as one of the Vatican's paramount experts on Latin. He died on Christmas Day at a Milwaukee nursing home; the Milwaukee Journal Sentinel reported that he had tested positive for COVID-19 less than two weeks earlier.

Rabbi Yisroel Friedman, 84, a scholar of the Talmud, the ancient text that forms the foundation of Jewish law. Born in the Soviet Union, he came to the United States in 1956 and spent more than 50 years as the top academic at the Talmudical Seminary Oholei Torah in Brooklyn. He was also a member of the Central Committee of Chabad-Lubavitch Rabbis.

Ayatollah Hashem Bathaei Golpayegani, in his late 70s, a prominent Shiite cleric in Iran. He was one of the representatives for Tehran in the Assembly of Experts, an all-cleric body that will choose the successor of the Supreme Leader Ayatollah Ali Khamenei. One of his teachers in seminary was the late Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini, founder of the Islamic Republic of Iran.

Rev. Robert Graetz, 92, the only local white minister to support the bus boycott that unfolded in Montgomery, Alabama, after the December 1955 arrest of Rosa Parks. Graetz was pastor of the majority-Black Trinity Lutheran Evangelical Church. He and his wife, Jeannie, faced harassment, threats and bombings as a result of their stance.

Rev. Dr. Ron Hampton, 64, pastor at New Vision Community Church, a Free Methodist Church in Shreveport, Louisiana. Days before COVID-19 killed him in May, Hampton sent a livestreamed message from his bed in a hospital isolation ward: Do not be afraid, be faithful and praise God.

Patriarch Irinej, 90, the top leader of the Serbian Orthodox Church, who died within a month of testing positive for the coronavirus. Irinej and the church's No. 2 leader, Bishop Amfilohije — who also died after COVID-19 complications — both downplayed the dangers of the pandemic and avoided wearing masks in public.

Harry R. Jackson Jr., 67, bishop of an independent charismatic megachurch in Maryland and one of several conservative Black church leaders who became close allies of President Donald Trump. Jackson was an outspoken opponent of abortion and same-sex marriage.

Edward Kmiec, 84, who between 1992 and 2012 served as the Roman Catholic bishop of Nashville, Tennessee, and Buffalo, New York. While leading the Buffalo diocese, he reduced the number of parishes from 265 to 169 and closed 25 Catholic elementary schools.

Sister Ellen Lorenz, 85, was a member of the School Sisters of Notre Dame with a distinguished career in Catholic education. She began as a high school teacher, later joined the faculty of Mount Mary University, and served as its president from 1979 until 1987. She was among nine nuns at a Milwaukee-area retirement home who died of COVID-19 complications in December; dozens of other U.S. nuns died of the coronavirus earlier in the year.

Rev. Joseph E. Lowery, 98, a veteran civil rights leader who helped the Rev. Martin Luther King Jr. found the Southern Christian Leadership Conference and fought against racial discrimination. Lowery led the SCLC for two decades and received the Presidential Medal of Freedom during the Obama presidency.

Rev. Franco Minardi, 94, arrived in the Italian farming town of Ozzano Taro in 1950 and served as its parish priest for 70 years before the coronavirus killed him. Intent on kindling the Catholic faith in young people, he arranged for construction of a tennis court, a games room and a theater where he projected the town's first movies in the mid-1950s. He was among scores of Italian priests who died of COVID-19.

Archbishop John Myers, 79, who between 1990 and 2016 served as the Roman Catholic bishop of Peoria, Illinois, and the archbishop of Newark, New Jersey.

Rev. Jorge Ortiz-Garay, 49, pastor of St. Brigid Church in New York City who is believed to have been the first Catholic cleric in the U.S. to die from the coronavirus. Ortiz grew up in Mexico, enrolled in seminary in Italy, then studied theology in New Jersey before being ordained in 2004. A decade later, he began his work at St. Brigid in a neighborhood straddling the border of Brooklyn and Queens that is home to many Hispanics.

Rabbi Yaakov Perlow, 89, president of Agudath Israel of America, an advocacy organization for ultra-Orthodox Jews. He also was leader of the Novominsker Hasidic dynasty, which was founded in Poland by his grandfather and later relocated to Brooklyn. Perlow died in April of complications arising from COVID-19, shortly after urging Orthodox Jews to follow social distancing guidelines.

Sister Ardeth Platte, 84, an American nun in the Dominican order who spent time in jail for anti-war and anti-nuclear protests. In one incident, Platte and two other Dominican nuns poured their own blood on a Minuteman III missile loaded with a 20-kiloton nuclear bomb in Weld County, Colorado, in October 2002. They were convicted of sabotage; Platte received the harshest sentence — 41 months.

Rev. Georg Ratzinger, 96, the older brother of Emeritus Pope Benedict XVI who earned renown in his own right as a director of an acclaimed German boys' choir. Ordained on the same day as his brother, Ratzinger oversaw the recording of numerous concert tours around the world by the Regensburger Domspatzen, a choir that traces its history back to the 10th century.

Jonathan Sacks, 72, the former chief rabbi in Britain, who reached beyond the Jewish community with his regular radio broadcasts. Sacks was leader of the United Hebrew Congregations of the Commonwealth for 22 years, stepping down in 2013.

Rabbi Adin Steinsaltz, 83, a Jewish scholar who spent 45 years compiling a groundbreaking translation of the Talmud. Steinsaltz, who established a network of schools in Israel and the former Soviet Union, wrote more than 200 books on subjects ranging from zoology to theology, but the Talmud was his greatest passion.

Rev. Darius Swann, 95, whose challenge of the system of segregated public schools in North Carolina's Charlotte-Mecklenburg school district helped spark the use of busing to integrate schools across the U.S. Early in his career, he served as a Presbyterian missionary in China and India. He later taught at George Mason University in Virginia and the Interdenominational Theological Center in Atlanta.

Sister Maria Ortensia Turati, 88, one of several nuns killed by the coronavirus in a convent in the northern Italian town of Tortona. Turati trained as a social worker, served as mother general of the Little Missionary Sisters of Charity from 1993-2005, and traveled the world, founding missions in the Philippines and Ivory Coast.

Rev. C.T. Vivian, 95, an early and key adviser to the Rev. Martin Luther King Jr. who organized pivotal civil rights campaigns and spent decades advocating for justice and equality. Vivian received the Presidential Medal of Freedom in 2013.

John Yambasu, 63, a bishop of the United Methodist Church in Sierra Leone who died in a traffic accident in August. He played a lead role in UMC negotiations seeking to resolve conflicts over whether the denomination should ordain LGBTQ people as ministers and fully recognize same-sex marriages.

Ravi Zacharias, 74, a popular author and speaker who founded and led Ravi Zacharias International Ministries, an organization devoted to presenting persuasive arguments for the existence of God and the importance of Christianity. A law firm hired by the ministry, in the wake of newly surfacing allegations, said on Dec. 22 — months after Zacharias' death — that it found "significant, credible evidence that Mr. Zacharias engaged in sexual misconduct over the course of many years."

The new commentary on the Qur'an has arrived

By MICHAEL SAAHIR

“We have explained in detail in this Qur'an, for the benefit of mankind, every kind of similitude: but man is, in most things, contentious.”

Qur'an 18:54

The new year 2021 is also the witness of a new publication, a 550-page book, “Commentary (Tafsir) on Qur'an” by Imam Warith Deen Mohammed, also known as “Wallace,” the son of the honorable Elijah Muhammad.

This commentary on the Qur'an has many biblical connections and Bible references that show the numerous correlations between the Muslim and Christian communities. Published by Words-Make-People Inc., the “Commentary (Tafsir) on Qur'an” by Imam Warith Deen Mohammed was produced by a team of African American Muslims from around the United States, under the leadership of Imam Nasir Ahmad of Miami, Florida, who has compiled a historical collection of Qur'anic commentaries given by the late Imam Warith Deen Mohammed who succeeded his father as the leader of the Nation of Islam in 1975 and who led the largest indigenous group of Muslim Americans until his passing in September 2008. Now his students have compiled his 30-plus years of commentary on the Qur'an in this new hard-bound publication.

Many Muslim Americans see this publication as proof that a new “school of Islamic thought” has been born in America, from the loins of descendants of slaves — an Islam void of Middle Eastern, African or other foreign influences yet 100% in accord with the Qur'an and the life exemplified by Prophet Muhammed, peace be upon him.

The contents of this book, while serving as a source of reconciliation in religious thinking, may also challenge many theological conclusions with fresh insights into current interpretations of our sacred texts. This text may prove valuable in inter-faith studies.

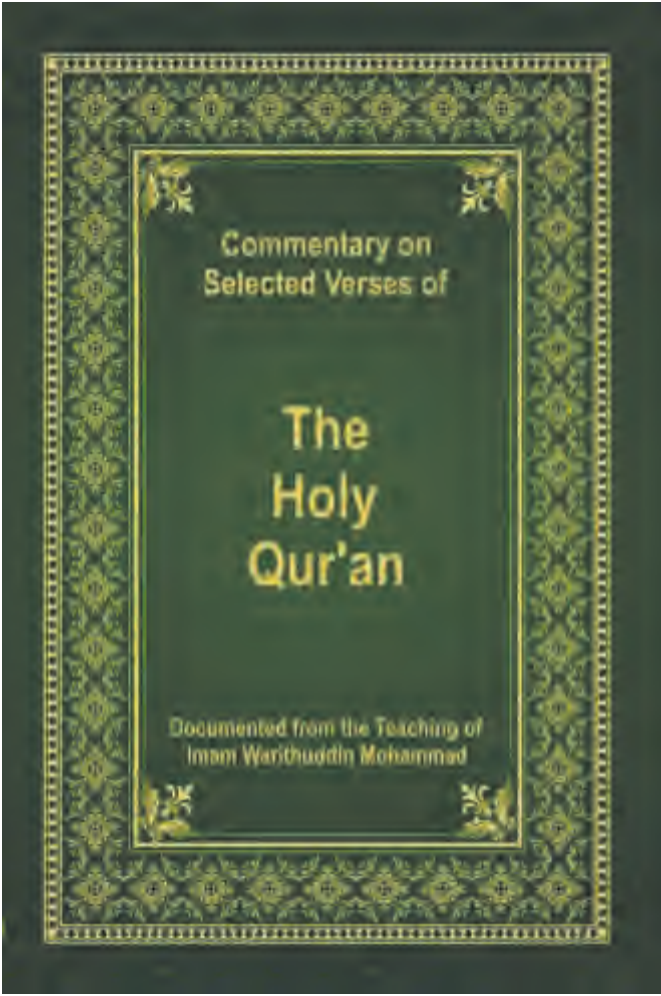

An excerpt of the book, explaining an important portion of the Muslim daily prayer, reads:

Then you say, “As salaamu alaina wa alaa ibaadul-laahi saliheen, Peace be on us because of you and on the righteous servants of G_d.” "Alainaa," aren't we the righteous servants of G_d? Why do we say, "Wa alaa ibaadullaahis saliheen" (and on the righteous servants of G_d)? It is because there are righteous servants out there among the Christians, among the Jews and other people and we wish them peace, too. Isn't that beautiful? When you really know what you are practicing, it is salvation. It is beauty. It is what will make us comfortable with other good people all around the world and make them comfortable with us. If you just take them my commentary, it will open up the world to you. People won't fear you. They will love you.

Imam Warith (Wallace Deen) spent his 33-year leadership uniting and reconciling the human family. His commentary on the Qur'an — while strongly maintaining traditional Islamic values — connects scriptural language from various faiths, namely the scripture of Jews and Christians.

Another excerpt that relates to Chapter 30, verse 30 of the Qur'an reads:

It is said that if a Muslim does not believe in Christ Jesus, he is not truly a Muslim. He is ignorant of his own identity, because to believe in Jesus Christ is to believe in yourself. It is to believe in the possibility for your own self if G_d puts His Spirit and His Word into you. You should be able to become Christ-natured and we agree in that. But we do not call it Christ nature. We call it fitraa, the original life pattern and discipline that G_d established in creating human beings for them to evolve into it, to hunger for it, to struggle and work hard for it, until you arrive there.

The “Commentary (Tafsir) on Qur'an” by Imam Warith Deen Mohammed is coming to you soon via all the major book outlets and at your local masjid (mosque) for $45 (wholesale prices available). The “Commentary (Tafsir) on Qur'an” by Imam Warith Deen Mohammed can be ordered at www.wordsmakepeople.com.

Michael “Mikal” Saahir is the resident Imam of Nur-Allah Islamic Center. He can be reached at nurallah@att.net or at 317 753-3754.

Local publisher gives new authors a chance

By TYLER FENWICK
tylerf@indyrecorder.com

Denola Burton found her passion for publishing books by first learning she didn't care for the writing part.

Burton works with nonprofits to improve leadership and communication through her company, Enhanced DNA, and she ended up writing a lot of stories to incorporate into the workshops. The stories Burton wrote were about herself, so she decided to adapt them into a memoir, "If You Really Knew Me: The Life, The Lessons and The Legacy."

Burton, who retired from Eli Lilly in 2017, joined the Independent Book Publishers Association and learned all she could about the publishing business. "That's where I felt like I got my joy," she said.

Burton started her publishing company, Enhanced DNA Publishing, in 2019. DNA stands for develop, nurture and achieve.

Enhanced DNA Publishing has about 35 authors, many of whom are Black women. Most authors are in the Indianapolis area, but some are based as far away as Texas and Florida. Burton said the most common genre is similar to the memoir she wrote — where people want to tell their story for others to learn from — but she's also published cookbooks, novels and devotional books.

The American Book Fest recognized three finalists under Enhanced DNA Publishing's umbrella for awards in November 2020.

Tina Rogers was a finalist in the nonfiction anthologies category for her book, "She Became Me: A Letter to My Younger Self," which features letters from 14 women to their younger selves.

Rogers said writing became part of a spiritual awakening she's gone through over the last few years. She wrote her first book — a short, three-chapter book that took three hours to write — in 2018.

Rogers said she considered self-publishing and also looked at a couple of other publishing companies before landing on Enhanced DNA Publishing.

Self-publishing can be tempting for first-time authors because it seems like a quick and easy way to publish, but it's a route replete with obstacles, many of which new authors often don't consider.

How much editing does the book need? Who will do the editing? How will marketing work? Who will design the cover? Will the final product meet a high enough standard?

Burton isn't an editor or graphic designer or marketer, but she has partners in various fields who can help as needed. It's what she calls a "cafeteria style" of publishing.

"I'm just a vehicle to get their publications out there," she said.

One of Burton's main goals is to help new authors learn the publishing process.

"Until you meet that basic standard, she's very honest with you that you're not ready to publish," Rogers said.

Chane' Lucas found Enhanced DNA Publishing at a women's conference in 2018, around the same time she started writing a play for her church. Lucas eventually turned the play into a novel, "Facing the Darkness," which was a finalist in the African American fiction category at American Book Fest.

Lucas also considered other publishing options but decided she needed more of the personal attention Burton could offer.

"I just loved her warm spirit," she said.

Authors haven't had much time to get to know each other because of the pandemic, Lucas said, but they still cheer each other on because they feel they're part of a team.

"You feel like you're part of something that's becoming great," Lucas said.

New headquarters, Purple Line and 'micro-transit' on IndyGo's agenda for 2021

By BREANNA COOPER
breannac@indyrecorder.com
By TYLER FENWICK
tylerf@indyrecorder.com

IndyGo is stepping into a momentous year as the transportation corporation will begin construction on the new Purple Line and transition to new headquarters on the east side.

IndyGo officials will likely also find themselves in a battle at the Statehouse for the second straight year.

IndyGo staff, including President and CEO Inez Evans, met with the Recorder to talk about what to expect in 2021 and beyond.

New headquarters

IndyGo will expand its footprint in Indianapolis with a new headquarters at the former Celadon Group site on East 33rd Street.

The transit corporation purchased the site in December 2020, and Evans said it will become the new headquarters in about a year.

The east campus, as IndyGo officials refer to it, will serve as the base for the construction team working on the upcoming Purple Line. It will also help accommodate more buses and employees as part of the Marion County Transit Plan.

"Now you'll have IndyGo as a major employer here on the east side," Evans said.

IndyGo will still have its west campus on West Washington Street.

Readying for a fight at the Statehouse

IndyGo will likely face another challenge from Sen. Aaron Freeman, R-Indianapolis, who in 2019 tried to punish the transit corporation for not meeting fundraising standards set in a 2014 law that authorized an increase in the city's income tax to fund more buses and projects such as the Red Line.

IndyGo will begin construction on the new Purple Line this year as part of a broader vision of transportation in Indianapolis. (Photo provided by IndyGo)

Freeman authored an amendment that would have blocked the transit corporation from moving forward with the Purple and Blue lines.

IndyGo officials have maintained the law's requirement is unrealistic. IndyGo, through the Indianapolis Public Transportation Foundation, which received nonprofit status in June 2019, is supposed to raise 10% of the revenue generated by the additional tax. That amounts to about $6 million per year.

So far, the foundation has raised $96,002.

The foundation ramped up fundraising efforts just as the pandemic hit, making it even more difficult to meet the requirement.

Freeman has indicated he will revisit this battle during the legislative session this year.

Evans said IndyGo's interpretation of the law is that it can include money that comes from grants and advertising, while Freeman believes the law requires private donations.

"We are committed to complying with the regulations," Evans said. "We're making great strides."

Cameron Radford, vice president of government affairs, said IndyGo enjoys the support of the vast majority of lawmakers from Marion County.

"The fact that just one or two people have been able to kind of distract from that message does not change the fact that there is strong support among the Marion County delegation and among the Indianapolis community," he said.

Construction on the Purple Line starts this year

IndyGo is moving forward with the Purple Line, which will run from Indianapolis to Lawrence. The bus-rapid transit line will replace route 39.

The Purple Line will stretch 15.2 miles and include 31 stations, including 12 shared with the Red Line. The project will cost $162 million.

Faith Chadwick, public information officer for IndyGo, said much of the budget for the Purple Line will go toward infrastructure improvements on the east side, including sidewalk rebuilding and street drainage.

Like the Red Line, the new line will include dedicated lanes on the road, requiring fairly significant road construction. Unlike the Red Line — which was met with some pushback from the community due to construction when it was built in 2018 — IndyGo officials said they haven't heard nearly as many complaints about the Purple Line plans.

IndyGo's east campus will be a place people can go to ask questions about what's happening with the Purple Line.

"We didn't have that before with the Red Line," Evans said, "and it was definitely a lesson learned for us."

Construction for the Purple Line is set to begin this year, and IndyGo expects to start operation in 2023.

"We have not allowed the pandemic to slow us down," Evans said.

The construction comes with partnerships. Two companies — Cook Medical and Goodwill Industry — will move their headquarters to the east side specifically, IndyGo said, because of the Purple Line.

Reevaluating transportation

IndyGo has been evaluating more efficient ways to provide transportation, which Evans said doesn't always have to include the traditional 40-foot bus that runs on a fixed route.

Instead, Evans said, there are opportunities for an "on-demand, micro-transit, smaller-type vehicle" to be a better fit for some communities. That would help seniors, for example, who might need more personalization in transit.

IndyGo partnered with the MLK Center to reduce transportation barriers, but because of the pandemic, the company started using the program — called the Midtown-Get-Around — to also deliver groceries and prescriptions.

"We're wanting to do more of those types of partnerships," Evans said, "because IndyGo, we may be the big transit agency, but we're not the ones who know everything."

Recovering from COVID-19

IndyGo hopes it will recover the ridership it lost in 2020 because of the COVID-19 pandemic.

Depending on the month, IndyGo has experienced less than a 50% reduction in ridership, Evans said, and the Red Line has already started to recover some of what it lost, increasing by 20%.

IndyGo officials also said it's been clear over the course of the pandemic that they provide an essential service — especially for other essential workers.

"We are still seeing riders on our buses, and that means they have somewhere that they need to be," Chadwick said.

New Rates

As an historic publication that has served the Indianapolis community for nearly 124 years, it's with regret that the Recorder must raise its rates for legal notices.

Over the past few years there have been undeniable increases in the cost of the paper, yet our company has absorbed the costs without increasing rates. Unfortunately, that is no longer feasible as costs continue to skyrocket. While our rates will increase effective Jan. 1, 2019, the rates are still lower than other media outlets.

We want to thank you for all the support you have shown us and ask for your continued support.

If you have any questions, please do not hesitate to call Rapheal Matthew at (317) 924-5143 or email legals@indyrecorder.com

I was wrong about your Colts

By DANNY BRIDGES

Six months ago yours truly told you the Indianapolis Colts would be an average football team and register a .500 record. I also stated they would not make the NFL playoffs and that would facilitate the end of the Philip Rivers experiment.

I had a plethora of reasons for my predictions and I thought all of you who talked about a division title and a home playoff game were blinded by your love for the guys with horseshoes on their helmets.

Now, before you call me idiotic (again) or even something stronger than that, let's take a look at some of the reasons I was ultimately incorrect.

First and foremost, Rivers. Simply put, he obviously had more left in the tank than I thought and when he finished with just over 4,100 passing yards and 24 touchdown passes, I was indeed surprised.

I also thought place kicking would be a weakness, but when Rodrigo Blankenship rolled out an incredible rookie campaign, that too proved to be a prediction that was, shall we say, somewhat inaccurate.

Throw in my statements about this team lacking a running back who could move the needle past the 1,000-yard mark (sorry, Jonathan Taylor), and I registered a rather anemic trifecta in terms of the offensive side of the ledger.

Yes, I proclaimed it might be difficult for Darius Leonard to match his production from last year, and I also said that outside of DeForest Buckner there were no significant new faces you could count on.

Before you email and tell me I was wrong about everything, please remember I did tell you the Colts cheerleaders would be stylish and that the retractable roof would not malfunction again this year.

Both of those came to pass, so please give me a little credit.

Now the fun starts in terms of the playoffs, and on Jan. 9 the Colts will travel to New York to face the red hot Buffalo Bills. While Indianapolis is clearly an underdog, I do think they have more than just a puncher's chance against the Bills if their defensive secondary shows up and plays with some intensity.

That being said, mix in enough of a running game to give Rivers the option of some play-action passing, and the same Colts I predicted would be woeful this year could conceivably pull off the upset against a Bills team that has been vulnerable at times despite their success this year.

Another plus is the weather forecast, which appears to be mild for this time of year in Buffalo. An apparent lack of strong winds and precipitation gives the Colts an even better chance, so I won't label them as a one-and-done team in the postseason just yet.

So, with such a stellar track record in terms of my regular season predictions, I'm calling for a close game, one that comes down to who has the final possession.

Prediction: Colts 27, Bills 24.

Maybe now a few of you will forgive me and provide a good start to a happy new year.

Danny Bridges who actually did predict the Colts opening day collapse at Jacksonville and their upset of the Green Bay, can be reached at 317-370-8447 or at bridgeshd@aol.com.

Indianapolis Colts running back Jonathan Taylor (28) rushes for a 45-yard touchdown in the Colts' 28-14 win over the Jacksonville Jaguars on Jan. 3 to secure a spot in the playoffs. (Photos/Jeff Brown)

Taylor rushed for 253 yards, a new single-game franchise record. The rookie running back also surpassed 1,000 yards on the season.

Colts linebacker Darius Leonard (53) deflects a pass intended for Jacksonville Jaguars wide receiver Chris Conley (18).

Domantas Sabonis (11) scored a team-high 25 points in the Pacers' 119-99 win over the Cavaliers.

Myles Turner (33) recorded 17 points, four rebounds and a block.
