How to bring fairness, transparency to redistricting

Screenshot from the proposed state House district map Republicans released Sept. 14, 2021.

By TYLER FENWICK tylerf@indyrecorder.com

Every year, some activists and state lawmakers push to establish an independent redistricting commission for Indiana. There are policy papers, rallies and usually a piece of legislation.

The legislation doesn't go anywhere, though. The most recent one — Senate Bill 283 — is a good example of what typically happens: It gets the standard first reading and then is sent to the Committee on Elections, where it sits untouched for the rest of the session.

The commission push is part of an effort to put a stop to gerrymandering, the process of manipulating state and congressional districts to gain an advantage or put the opposing political party at a disadvantage. Indiana, like many other states, leaves redistricting to state lawmakers.

House Republicans released their proposed congressional and Indiana House maps Sept. 14 and hosted the first of two hearings Sept. 15. The Goodwill of Central and Southern Indiana partnered with Conexus Indiana and Cook Medical to create the Make & Move Up program to train 50 residents in advanced manufacturing and logistics. Kent Kramer, president and CEO of Goodwill of Central and Southern Indiana, announced the program Sept. 9.

The training, called Catapult Indiana, was made possible by a $200,000 donation from JPMorgan Chase. Al Smith, state chairman for JPMorgan Chase, said the project aligns with the financial institution's dedication to neighborhood investment.

"A skilled workforce and an inclusive recovery are key to Indianapolis' growth," Smith said. "Partnerships between community partners and business are critical to helping provide more people with the resources, skills and training they need to succeed. This investment helps prepare more Indianapolis residents for a more prosperous future."

Conexus Indiana, a nonprofit focused on building and maintaining the manufacturing sector in Indianapolis, will play a role in creating jobs at a new production facility being built at 6190 E. 38th St. The Catapult Indiana training also comes from Conexus.

After completing the training, workers will have a national certification as well as several credits from Ivy Tech. Beginning salaries, Kramer said, will be over $15 an hour and includes benefits, as well as wrap-around services such as child-care and education.

"This partnership will show what can happen when we tap into a neighborhood's human potential and put real opportunities on the table," Kramer said. "I can't wait to witness Make & Move Up's long-term impact."

Ashley Gurvitz, chief operations officer and executive director of United Northeast Community Development Corporation, worked with Kramer and Conexus Indiana CEO Fred Cartwright to introduce them to the northeast side and its residents.

Circadian Coffee finding its identities

By TYLER FENWICK tylerf@indyrecorder.com

When Kelsey Speigner and Adam Datema were starting their coffee roasting business, it was Datema who typically took the lead as the more public-facing half of the ownership duo for Circadian Coffee.

Datema is a white man, and that's by and large who runs the coffee business in the U.S. — at least, after the beans get here from Central America, South America and Africa. Speigner, a Black woman and majority owner, knew that's just how it had to be.

Take financing as an example. They had a hard time getting Circadian going because business loans weren't easy to come by outside of loan sharks who wanted to charge exorbitantly high interest rates. The two strikes, Speigner said, were her being a Black woman and both of them being in their 20s.

It's difficult for Speigner to recall specifics, but there have been other times where she asked Datema to take the lead, knowing he would fare better as a white man.

"And I know it, and it's not a great feeling to know it," she said.

That was then. Circadian started in 2016, and things have changed. It's fashionable to be a Black-owned business after the Black Lives Matter protests in 2020.

CIRCADIAN COFFEE

Circadian Coffee, which started in 2016, is a Black-owned coffee roastery. It is not a cafe, but you can buy bags of beans, along with cold brew by the gallon and 96-ounce to-go boxes of hot coffee.

• Location: 2045 E. 46th St.

• Where to get coffee: Circadian Coffee is in multiple cafes. Find a full list at circadiancoffee.com.

People started emailing to verify Circadian is Black owned. There are more interview requests now. Some customers pull up to the pickup window and, upon seeing Datema standing there, ask if the business is actually Black owned.

"So I have to come wave and be like, 'I'm here," Speigner said with a laugh.

It wasn't until last year that the company website even mentioned Circadian is a minority woman-owned business.

The shift has been uncomfortable in some ways. Speigner and Datema don't always know who to trust. They've turned down opportunities to appear at events because it seems like some organizers have only selfish reasons for inviting them — wanting to say, "Look, we know Black people," as Speigner said.

The two are more skeptical now.

Yurij Rudensky, redistricting counsel for the Brennan Center for Justice's State Rep. Cherrish Pryor, a Democrat Democracy Program, warned that not all commissions are created equal, and in the title doesn't mean that's how it actually operates.

"The devil is definitely in the details,"

Rudensky co-authored a guide to redistricting reform, along with model ommended makeup for a 15-member

The guide also has recommendations for how to be transparent, including not communicating with outsiders attempting to influence the map-drawing process, and says the commission should have at least 10 public meetings outside of regular work hours.

Still, Rudensky said a less-than-ideal commission would be preferable to the secretive, biased process many state legislatures use to draw districts.

May, he released his memoir, "My Time Will Come," detailing his early life in the foster care system, his crime, and the unrelenting punishment he faced as an inmate in the Apalachee Correctional Institution.

On Sept. 22, Manuel will share his story — and his message of hope — with an audience at Butler University's Shelton Auditorium as the inaugural Visiting Black Intellectual for Butler's Hub for Black Affairs and Community Engagement.

At 13, Manuel was instructed by a group of older teens to commit robbery. During the attempt, Manuel shot and wounded a woman and was later arrested by Florida police. His mother and lawyer urged him to plead guilty to attempted robbery and attempted murder to reduce his sentence, but the trial judge wanted to make an example out of the teenager.

"During my sentencing, the judge said he didn't understand how anyone could stand before him and say their environment played a role in committing a crime," Manuel said. "But he didn't know my mom also grew up in that environment, and she went to prison for shooting somebody when I was a newborn baby. The environment and being poor and Black has a huge impact on our choices." "My Time Will Come" is an honest and vulnerable depiction of life in one of Florida's toughest prisons. However, Manuel said the story was "cleaned up" more than he would have liked by editors and his publishing company. "I wanted to say a lot more about the abuse from correctional officers and the department of corrections that is hidden from the public eye," Manuel said. "If George Floyd could be murdered by a police officer in broad daylight with people standing around, imagine what happens behind closed prison doors when there's no one

there to record."

Manuel described solitary confinement as draconian the United Nations deems any solitary confinement lasting more than 15 days to be torture – and said prisoners are often drugged and denied mattresses and blankets, as well as routinely gassed with chemical agents.

In many ways, Manuel said he's lucky. Upon his release, he had a reentry program in place thanks to the Equal Justice Initiative. Many former inmates don't have an easy path to getting back on their feet — if a path for them exists at all. The department of corrections, Manuel said, isn't about correcting the behavior of those in prison, it's about control.

"It's on the individual himself to seek to be better," Manuel said. "And a lot of times, those opportunities aren't there. Usually when you're released, you're given $50 and a bus ticket and asked not to reoffend, but you can't find a job.

You can't get an apartment because you have a record. ... The reentry process in this country needs a lot of work."

Manuel looks forward to sharing "My Time Will Come" with a Hoosier audience. While initially hesitant to share stories from his childhood, Manuel said the writing process was cathartic.

"I learned that everything happens for a reason. We all have something within us that pushes us to survive even in the toughest of circumstances," Manuel said. "The human spirit can survive some hellish circumstances. I was a child when I was placed in an adult prison, and I didn't know how that would turn out. But I came out with my sanity, talent and humanity intact, and I know that the human will can endure."

Indiana districts get less money for quarantined students. That might change.

By ALEKSANDRA APPLETON Chalkbeat Indiana

Indiana school districts grappling with a possible loss of funding for quarantining students could get relief under newly proposed legislation.

The state code currently allocates students who receive primarily virtual instruction 85% of the funding given to students who attend physical classes — with no exception for those who might be learning virtually in quarantine.

The classifications are determined by how much time a student spends virtually between the beginning of the year and the Sept. 17 count day, which this year follows a surge in pediatric cases and accompanying quarantines that have kept many out of in-person classes.

But a legislative fix could extend the window for verifying a student's primary learning mode, allowing the Department of Education to retroactively allocate 100% funding for students who attended school in person for more than half the days through Dec. 31.

The legislature will consider that change in its next session, which opens in January, according to a Sept. 10 letter from House Speaker Todd Huston and Senate President Pro Tempore Rod Bray.

"There are details about this process that we must still work out, but we thought it important to publicly share our agreement now, given that Sept. 17 is rapidly approaching and schools may need to make policy adjustments accordingly," the letter said. "We also understand if circumstances with the pandemic change dramatically in the months ahead, we might have to consider other solutions to this funding issue."

The proposal would be a relief to school districts concerned about losing funding due to high numbers of students in quarantine at the beginning of this year, said Denny Costerison, executive director of the Indiana Association of School Business Officials.

"It was never the intent to have a penalty that way," Costerison said.

The state provides the majority of funding for K-12 schools. The virtual category is funded at 15% less due to the difference in physical building costs for virtual students, such as maintenance and insurance, Costerison said.

Last year, the state allowed 100% funding for students who would be in their classroom seats if not for the pandemic.

But the legislature, expecting the pandemic to recede and widespread on-campus learning to resume, reverted to the state code rule of 85% funding for virtual students, no matter the circumstances, Costerison said.

"No one anticipated at the time the delta factor," Costerison said. "No one anticipated talking about quarantine now."

Costerison said he expects an additional legislative change that gives the Department of Education the power to review attendance and make adjustments for quarantines in the future.

Members of the Association of School Business Officials welcome the proposal, Costerison said, particularly those from districts whose enrollment has not rebounded as expected after COVID first closed schools.

"It's a relief, if you were continuing to decline in enrollment, that you don't have this problem too," Costerison said.

Indiana State Teachers Association President Keith Gambill said the change would be a step in the right direction, allowing school districts to prioritize health and safety.

"It's important for us that schools don't get penalized in any way for things that are out of their control," Gambill said."That we don't create a system that would hint at an incentive to not follow the science."

It is also important for lawmakers to consider long-term proposals that could be used again should schools face another unforeseen situation like the COVID-19 pandemic, Gambill said

"I would hope we never have to use this language again ever," Gambill said. "But having gone through this, let's make sure we're doing things in a way that would be good for the future."

Arts & Culture 'Mogul Mowgli'

By DWIGHT BROWN NNPA News Wire Film Critic

"I'm built to prove myself," chants Zed (Riz Ahmed, Sound of Metal), a rebellious British/Pakistani rapper. Brazenly, he's sharing a new, defiant perspective on the South Asian experience in the Western world.

Culture clash powers this feature film debut by documentary director Bassam Tariq. It's a reckoning for the central character and anyone who has drifted into a culture not their own and forsaken their roots and family. The thoughtful premise and profound script are a collaborative effort by the Oscarnominated actor Ahmed and the Sundance award-winning filmmaker Tariq.

The film's title is taken from a song by the British hip-hop group Swet Shop Boys (featuring rappers Heems and Riz MC and producer Redinho). Ahmed, aka Riz MC, explains the tune's virtues: "The song's about being torn between different sides of your identity, being descended from moguls and rich heritage, but living as Mowgli, lost in the urban jungle far away from the village that was once home." In this case, specifically, it's about the Pakistani immigrant experience. However, universally, anyone part of a diaspora living in a land that's not the birthplace of their ancestors can relate. And so, this modern, urban, nonnative parable in many ways explores a shared experience.

The London rapper Zed is about to make it big-time. His manager Nasra (Sudha Bhuchar) has booked him on a tour as the opening act for a superstar. Finally good money and the recognition he's cov(colonialism); "I'll put my roots on their ground" (immigration); "I put my truth in this sound" (self-expression based in rapping); "I spit my truth and it's brown" (his fiery spoken words convey a Pakistani perspective).

Weakness in Zed's right leg and other odd muscle spasms plague him. Something is wrong. Fate and destiny are playing mean tricks. A diagnosis reveals a crippling autoimmune disease. A disturbing image of a man with flower curtains on his face haunts him. Zed falls into the loving arms of the family he's neglected for his ambitious career. His mother, siblings and particularly his conservative father Bashir (Alvy Khan) console him. Dad finds it hard to understand his "Londonstani" son who eschews tradition.

This poignant journey into the rap world, as seen through the eyes of a brilliant but struggling Pakistani MC, is compelling. Toss in the culture clash, social consciousness raising and Southeast Asian pride and the storyline becomes far more engaging and crucial than many films of this ilk. The life-altering illness and attempts at rehab test the protagonist's will and integrity. The strained, loving but conflicting fragile fatherson relationship provides the basis for the most emotionally charged subplot. Their bond is primal - fundamental in ways anyone could understand.

Tarig's very capable direction shows its range as he guides the cast and crew through live concerts, dramatic hospital scenes and even intimate moments in a fertility center. The jealousy between Zed, who paid his dues, and the up-and-coming young impish MC RPG (Nabhaan Rizwan) is well detailed too. As the film progresses, plot pieces fit together well for the most part, except for the more visceral scenes when the constant images of the strange man with flowers wears thin.

A Section Friday, September 17, 2021

There's a distinct rhythm to the footage (editors Adam Biskupski and Hazel Baillie), which is never boring thanks to the atmospheric lighting and smart cinematography (Annika Summerson), authentic-looking sets (production designer Francesca Massariol) and characterappropriate clothes (costume designer Grace Snell). Any small porous holes in the production are filled by Paul Corley's entrancing musical score.

The supporting cast revolves around Ahmed like planets around the sun. Aiysha Hart, as Bina, the ex-girlfriend who distances herself from Zed in his hour of need, is sufficiently bitter. The voice of reason necessary to portray the manager has been wisely assigned to Anjana Vasan. Rizwan finds the right nuances in the young rapper who would steal his mentor's thunder. The second brightest light in the cast is shone by Alyy Khan, who imposes an unconditional paternal love on the father figure that is questioning, learning and growing.

Riz Ahmed's gripping performance in "Sound of Metal" was a bellwether. He's a consummate, sensitive actor. The brazenness of Zed's rap performances. The dismay at his careerthreatening prognosis. The arrogance with his girlfriend, love for his mom, disdain for RPG and ambivalent relationship with his father is displayed by an actor who is an emotional chameleon. Ahmed gamely straddles an array of raw feelings conveying them physically, on his face and in his eyes.

Rap, originally an inner-city African American artform, has evolved into a universal language, a means of communication that a British Pakistani artist uses respectfully to articulate his experience. Ahmed, Tariq and the entire cast and crew are riding a new wave of modern, urban Southeast Asian cinema.

Zed's freestyling isn't about bedding women, smoking weed or gang fights. His brilliant streams of thought confront colonialism, imperialism and racism put upon brown-skinned people by white culture. Zed raps: "They put their boots on our ground"

Belmont Beach events 'shine a positive light' on westside

FORMAL OPENING OF NEW WEST SIDE BEACH SATURDAY

Belmont Beach was a popular spot for African Americans in Indianapolis during the 1930s. (Photo from the Recorder archives)

By BREANNA COOPER BreannaC@indyrecorder.com

When Tedd Hardy began the Belmont Beach Project in May, he hoped the space would serve as a hotbed for community events, as it had in the past. Now, with a calendar full of events ranging from "Sunday Fundays" to movie nights, Hardy is seeing his vision come to life.

On Sept. 19, the Belmont Beach Project will host its third "Sunday Funday," from noon to 5 p.m. Visitors can participate in a community forum, followed by games including community chess.

"The Belmont Beach Project is very important, as this type of development will bring awareness to the community and shine a positive light on the progress being made on the westside of Indianapolis," Hardy, community ambassador for the Central Indiana Community Foundation, said.

Supported with a grant from Lilly Endowment, the Belmont Beach Project reimagined what was once the only spot on the city's west side where Black residents could swim. Initially, Belmont Beach wasn't segregated. When it became clear that water in the Emrichsville Dam at Belmont Beach a section of the White River – was too polluted from companies dumping industrial chemicals and slaughterhouse waste, city officials named the Haughville beach a Black-only beach. Historian Paul Mullins called the beach the "epitome of environmental racism - Black residents were only allowed to be in water deemed too degraded to be of use to white residents." Despite dangerous water conditions,

Black families on the westside often gathered at Belmont to swim and have picnics. While you can't swim at Belmont Beach today, the temporary pop-up park has provided visitors with entertainment and a reminder of what Belmont Beach used to be for the Black community in Indianapolis.

Events — including sports, movie nights and concerts — will take place through Oct. 31. In November, materials that were used to build the park and staging will be repurposed for other events and programs in the community. Though the project is a temporary popup site, Hardy hopes it leads to more development in the Haughville area.

Indiana hospitals strained for ICU space amid latest surge

By CASEY SMITH Associated Press/Report for America

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) – Indiana hospitals continue to take the brunt of a statewide surge in infections and hospitalizations spurred by the more contagious delta variant.

The state Health Department's latest report showed that hospitals around the state were treating 2,631 patients for COVID-19 as of Sept. 12 - upmore than six times for the state's level of about 400 patients a day in early July.

Hospitals reported treating 726 people with COVID-19 in intensive care units, taking up more than 33% of available ICU beds. Statewide, nearly 83% of all ICU beds are occupied.

As patient admissions spike to levels not recorded since last winter's surge, some Indiana hospitals have announced delays in some non-emergency surgeries, while others have started diverting ambulances away from their emergency rooms and intensive care units.

Eskenazi Health in Indianapolis has canceled all such procedures through at least Sept. 24. Columbus Regional Health, about 40 miles (64.37 kilometers) south of Indianapolis, suspended all non-emergency surgeries and procedures, indefinitely, starting Sept 13.

Indiana University Health, the state's largest hospital system, last week began to put off all elective inpatient procedures for at least two weeks. Hospital officials said the suspension will be extended if needed in two-week periods.

Dr. Chris Weaver, an emergency medicine physician and senior vice president of clinical effectiveness for IU Health, said that while last winter's surge has taught hospitals to more quickly convert rooms to accommodate critical care patients, ICUs are "full and capacity is tight."

"It's been crazy busy," Weaver said. "We've seen a big surge — in high volumes - of COVID cases, and pretty much everything. But the COVID burden is adding a great deal to it all."

Although Weaver said the hospital system has not reached absolute capacity - and he doesn't think it will - the latest surge has required more hospitals to implement diversion measures, at times requiring patients to be transferred to other hospitals to receive care. "With the volumes that hospitals are seeing, and to take care of patients and to make sure that everybody has a space to get cared for safely, it's really strained," Weaver said. "The numbers that we're seeing in our ICUs, and those being on a ventilator, those dying ... a really, really small number of individuals that have been vaccinated are being affected that way. But that huge majority of people that are not vaccinated is really putting a strain on the capacity and access for care for everybody."

About 54% of Indiana residents are fully vaccinated against COVID-19, the 15th-lowest rate among the states, according to the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention. State health officials, meanwhile, say 98% of recent COVID-19 hospitalizations are for unvaccinated people.

State officials have also maintained that if more Hoosiers don't get vaccinated and wear masks, virus spread and hospitalizations will worsen though at least early October. They've attributed the recent surge, in part, to students' return to schools.

Nearly 5,000 new cases were reported among Indiana students in the state health department's weekly update of its coronavirus school dashboard on Sept. 13. Only about 3,000 of those cases dated back to the previous week, however.

The dashboard also reported 254 new cases among teachers and 397 new cases among other school staff employees.

Still, the dashboard data doesn't provide the full scope of virus spread within schools. More than 600 schools about one-quarter of all Indiana schools - have not reported cases to the state's dashboard as mandated by law since the start of the new academic year.

The availability of virus data has improved since early August, when nearly half of all schools were failing to report to the state. A health department spokesperson said state health officials are "exploring options" to compel other schools to comply.

Coffee beans go from the drum roaster into a bucket.

"Are you interested in us because we're Blackowned, or are you interested in us because we do good work?" Datema said. "We want to be known for doing good work, you know?"

If not for some bad luck, Circadian Coffee wouldn't be in Indianapolis; it would be in Detroit. Speigner and Datema tried for a year and a half to make that work, but it never did. They knew they wanted to be in the Midwest, so they tried Indianapolis and had their location on East 46th Street within a week of contacting the landlord.

Circadian isn't a cafe, so you can't go and buy a cup of coffee. The company is primarily a wholesale roastery selling bags of beans, along with cold brew by the gallon and 96-ounce togo boxes of hot coffee. Speigner is from Maryland. She graduated from High Point University in North Carolina with an entrepreneurship degree and got into the coffee business shortly after. She was working for a roaster in Boston when she met Datema, who is from Fort Wayne. They decided to go into business together because of their similar outlook on what coffee should be.

The philosophy at Circadian is coffee can be good without all of the over-the-top aesthetics that have come into vogue.

Some people want to know everything about how the bean got from the farm to the cafe — right down to knowing the name of the farmer's dog, Speigner joked — but most everyone else just wants that basic cup of coffee in the morning to get their day going. "Our whole thing is coffee doesn't need to be super expensive or complicated to be good or to fit your functional needs," Speigner said.

Datema is the head roaster and said Circadian puts out 200-300 pounds of coffee in a normal week. Their busiest time of the year is fall and winter.

Circadian's coffee is in eight cafes full time and another few on a rotating basis. See a list of where Circadian Coffee is sold at circadiancoffee.com.

The new maps are out

By INDIANA CITIZEN

Indiana's Republican legislative leaders on Sept. 14 made public most of the redistricting maps that they plan to enact during a legislative process that began the next day.

The maps include Indiana's nine congressional districts and the 100 districts in the Indiana House of Representatives. The 50 redrawn districts in the Indiana Senate are expected to be released Sept. 21.

One of the bigger changes on the congressional district map appears to be in the 5th District, which has been redrawn to exclude all of northern Marion two or fewer persons, from the ideal County, a change seen as shoring up the population of 753,948. Republican vote for first-term incumbent Victoria Spartz. Another change: The 6th Congressional District held by Rep. Greg Pence has been redrawn to more compactly take in counties in east central Indiana; the current 6th meanders further south to the Ohio River.

The 1st Congressional District – also under scrutiny after reports that it might be redrawn to weaken the Democratic vote for first-term incumbent Frank Mrvan – was left largely unchanged.

Generally, the redrawn congressional and legislative districts follow county lines more closely than those currently in effect, one of the changes urged by redistricting reform groups and cited by House Republicans in releasing the maps.

"These proposed maps are the culmination of a months-long effort, which included listening to Hoosiers across the state," said Rep. Rep. Greg Steuerwald (R-Avon), primary author of the redistricting legislation, in a news release.

"We pulled together all the data along with public input to draw fair maps that account for shifts in population over the years."

Added House Speaker Todd Huston: "For the new House maps, Representative Steuerwald took a holistic approach District 41; Brown earlier had indicated and worked tremendously hard to keep that he plans to retire in 2022 and communities of interest together with a focus on compactness."

The news release cited the following as improvements over the 2011 maps, also drawn by Republican majorities in the House and the Senate:

• "The proposed Indiana House map increases the number of counties that are wholly contained within one House district from 26 to 32. There are 22 fewer township splits where a single township is represented by multiple House districts. The draft House map includes a less than 1 percent deviation from the ideal population of 67,855 for each district.

• "The proposed Congressional map keeps 84 of Indiana's 92 counties whole, we're only going to get one option on and includes a near equal deviation,

• "Both plans are substantially comparable to or better than the maps passed in 2011 based on the most widely acknowledged compactness standards." Contrary to previous redistricting processes in 2011 and 2001, mapmakers declined to make themselves available for a news conference, only releasing statements and not articulating their decisions made in private. Since Republicans have the supermajority in each chamber, Democrats had no say in the process.

In previous years, mapmakers released information about the number of incumbents in each district and whether any new districts had no sitting drawn districts specifically, focusing representatives.

In legislative districts, changes included the redrawing of districts that resulted in the residences of some incumbent Republicans winding up outside their borders, including Rep. Curt Nisly, R-Milford, a social conservative and consistent thorn in the side of more moderate House Republican leadership.

Sharing a redrawn House District 44 are the two-term incumbent, Beau Baird, R-Greencastle, and House Ways and Means Chairman Timothy Brown, R-Crawfordsville, whose residence will fall outside the lines of his redrawn made it official Sept. 14, according to Dave Bangert, author of the Substack column Based in Lafayette, Indiana. In addition, Speaker Huston's House District 37 was redrawn to include more Republican-friendly northern Hamilton manipulated our Hoosier democ-County; its current configuration had resulted in relatively competitive elections for Huston in 2018 and 2020.

One key omission from the public release of the maps was the unavailability of the data in the "Shapefile" format, and when it mattered most, manipuwhich is an electronic format that can be used to build districts by combining census data and political precinct data.

"Unfortunately, when we have supermajorities controlling everything, the table," said Julia Vaughn, policy director of Common Cause Indiana, the state's main advocate for redistricting reform in 2021, adding that if her organization had access to the data in a Shapefile format, it would be much better prepared to do analyses to show how voters and communities could be impacted by the proposed districts.

"Today what we're dealing with is a complete lack of transparency," said Vaughn. "You know, this is my third go-round of redistricting. I was there firsthand in 2001 and 2011, and this is the first time I can remember that maps have been released online with no in-person explanation."

The initial response from House Democrats did not mention the reinstead on previous reports that House Republicans hired Washington, D.C.based attorney Jason Torchinsky, widely known for his court defense of Republican-drawn maps in other states and opposition to independent redistricting house Wednesday or Thursday to the initiatives.

"Indiana House Democrats continue to analyze the House Republicans' redistricting plan," said House Minority Leader Philip GiaQuinta, D-Fort Wayne, them you want them to not vote for any in a news release.

"While we don't know everything about these newly drawn districts, we do know that any map drawn with the assistance of high-priced D.C. consultants, using advanced political and consumer data points, will benefit the Indiana GOP - not Hoosier voters."

Mike Schmuhl, chairman of the Indiana Democratic Party, offered sharper criticism in a news release.

"Indiana Republicans have once again racy in this year's redistricting period," Schmuhl said. "Over the summer, they held shadow hearings that felt more like a comment box, promised a process that would be 'fair' and transparent,' lated the system once again to favor themselves over Hoosier voters.

"The Republicans' new Indiana House and congressional maps keep in place a broken system where self-serving politicians benefit at the expense of Indiana families. These maps were drawn unfairly, without transparency, and are gerrymandered."

The House Elections and Apportionment Committee received public testimony on the new districts in a hearing Sept. 15, leaving far less than the two weeks' notice that redistricting reform groups had urged. A second public hearing is planned for 10 a.m. Sept. 16, and the committee is set to vote on the congressional and Indiana House district maps Sept. 20, sending the legislation to the full House, where a final vote is expected Sept. 23.

The redistricting legislation will then go to the Indiana Senate, which will review the maps with an eye toward wrapping up by Oct. 1.

Vaughn of Common Cause Indiana urged the public to attend this week's hearings.

"If you're one of the fortunate people that doesn't have to work a 9-5, I would encourage you to come to the Statecommittee hearings and make your voice heard," she said. "If you are unable to do that, which is completely understandable, contact your legislators. Tell maps that weren't drawn in a transparent manner."

On repeat ... like a broken record

By OSEYE BOYD

I sound like a broken record. It seems like every few weeks I'm writing about COVID-19 in one way or another.

Well, I'm going to do so today because I'm really getting worried. I'm getting worried that this thing will be with us forever because we don't know how to act. And I'm not just speaking about the vaccination. I understand legitimate vaccine hesitancy. I'm not going to dismiss people's real questions and concerns. I say real because I'm not here for the conspiracytheory based research. I just spoke with a relative who remembers her father being poked and prodded for a disease he never had. She remembers the nurses coming to their home every week. She doesn't like needles. She has trust issues. She has PTSD, and I understood in that moment, I'm not equipped to help her overcome something so deep rooted.

Vaccination is one component — an important component — of the COVID-19 conversation, but when I say we don't know how to act I'm talking about doing the things we've been asked to do since the coronavirus came on the scene – mask up and social distance. Yes, I know we're tired of wearing masks, especially when we thought we were done with them, but the coronavirus isn't done with us.

I'm also scared. I'm scared of this delta variant. It's spreading like wildfire and doesn't want to let up. The numbers were decreasing. It seemed like summer was the end, and our lives could finally get back to normal. We want to live again - be in crowded spaces and not worry about it being a super-spreader event. But this disease had different plans for us.

According to the Indiana Department of Health COVID-19 dashboard, Marion County has 371 cases per 100,000 residents weekly. In Indiana, the number of new cases as of Sept. 14 is 4,733 and the number of deaths between Aug. 21 and Sept. 14 is 68. Statewide, we have 2,227 ICU beds available. Of those beds, 32.4% are in use for COVID-19, 49.3% are in use for non-COVID-19 issues and 18.3% are available.

I'm worried and scared those numbers could get worse as the cold and flu season approaches. We social distanced last winter and that helped reduce the number of people with the cold or flu. That may not be the case this year. So, we'll be back to hospitals, doctors and nurses imploring us to come to the hospital only if truly necessary. We'll continue to see doctors and nurses burnt out from lack of sleep and self-care as they take care of others. We'll continue to see doctors and nurses pleading with us to take COVID-19 seriously because it hurts them to see so much unnecessary death.

We shouldn't be debating about whether to wear a mask or not. We want normal so bad we're risking our lives for it. We're willing to risk the lives of our children. Schools shouldn't have to deal with angry mobs, looking for blood at the first sign of a mask mandate. Young teens shouldn't be heckled by adults when they speak about their hurt at watching their grandmother die of COVID-19. The behavior of those adults in Tennessee was just shameful.

We also shouldn't be debating all these months later if COVID-19 is real. The people who don't believe the coronavirus is real are often the ones who aren't taking any precautions, and these are the very people who don't want to quarantine when they're exposed, putting others at risk. Most of us don't want to quarantine. It's disruptive, but that's what has to happen when people don't act right.

I'm scared the next mutation could be even worse more easily spread and more deadly. It shouldn't take catching COVID-19, almost dying or having a loved one die before people recognize reality. Unfortunately, for some it does, and it will take more deaths that hit close to home before we do better.

I don't want to live in an after COVID-19 world where we remember the fun days of not wearing a mask when we gather in public places, so for now I guess I'll keep sounding like a broken record, reminding us how we should act.

By LARRY SMITH

I recently posted a meme that - in an obviously playful way - suggested that Christians should block romantic partners who don't share their faith. I was amazed that some people took serious offense to the post, believing that it encouraged Christians to shun nonbelievers. This erroneous conclusion is based on their discomfort with, or misunderstanding of, Christian doctrine.

Importantly, I acknowledge that such discomfort and misunderstanding are often based on unpleasant interactions with Christians, who can be poor ambassadors of our religion. Yet, most atheists and agnostics agree with me that people should not judge a belief system based upon its worst adherents. Further, the plain fact is that most Christians actively cultivate friendships with people who don't share our faith. Most Christians focus on eternal life. Conversely, most people who identify as spiritual focus on temporal life. Thus, while Christians have friendships with nonbelievers, being

"unequally yoked" is another matter practically and theologically. Indeed, a core biblical dictum is that only Christians will spend eternity in heaven. It is nearly impossible to overstate this point. Thus, some Christians reject nonbelievers as potential spouses because, according to Scripture, they will not "inherit the kingdom of God."

In the immortal words of that great psalmist, Prince: "I'm here to tell you that there's a better way. Would our Lord be happy if He came today? I ain't sayin' I'm better, no better than you. But if you want to play with me, vou better learn the rules." Critics of Christianity would be vindicated if we rejected all relationships with nonbelievers; they are completely wrong to argue that not selecting a mate who you believe will not spend eternity with us constitutes shunning.

Consider Pascal's wager: If Christians are no admissions requirements. Not race. Not class. Not gender. Not geography. Not education. Not perceived beauty. Not physical ability. In short, few human traits that we use to separate ourselves — or to subjugate others prevent people from being spiritual.

There is another belief system that has the same admissions requirements: Christianity. Consider, for example, John 3:16. It is perhaps the best known biblical passage, even among nonbelievers. God's invitation to eternal life through faith in Jesus is open to everyone. Still, it is conditional. Most people focus on "For God so loved the world" but often forget about "whoever believes in (Jesus)." As theologians have long observed, God is sovereign, but he gave mankind free will (or "agency" in contemporary parlance). Of all the criticisms regarding Christianity, the notion that it is exclusionary is perhaps column.)

Consider the following analogy. Someone invites you to an unbelievably lavish — and free — banquet. You choose instead to eat leftovers. Is it reasonable for you to be angry with the host (or those who accepted the invitation)? While analogies are imperfect, this is in essence the mindset of many who knowingly reject Christianity, yet are angry with God and/or Christians.

No one forces anyone to become a Christian. Likewise, no one prevents anyone from becoming a Christian. I respect the agency of those who reject Christ. But they should not criticize Christians who adhere to what our faith teaches. It is intellectually - not to mention spiritually - dishonest to consciously reject faith in Jesus and yet be angry for missing out on his rewards.

In resigning from the Friars Club, legendary comedian Groucho Marx wrote, "I don't want to belong to any club that would accept me as one of its members." Fortunately, Christianity is not a club. It is a religion that accepts anyone, irrespective of their characteristics, circumstances or past. The choice to believe Jesus is yours alone.

are wrong about eternal life, the worst outcome is that we would forego life on Earth with a loving, but nonbelieving, spouse. But, if we're right, the worst outcome is that we will spend eternity with our nonbelieving spouse. In the words of avowed atheist Woody Allen, "Eternity is very long, especially near the end."

Inclusion tends to be a core value of people who identify as spiritual; there the oddest.

Similarly, all people are equally subject to the same punishment for rejecting Christ. Given our free will, many Christians argue that God doesn't send anyone to Hell; if we find ourselves there after death, it is of our own accord. (I recognize the crucial question of what happens to those who never hear about Jesus during their lifetime. I might address that issue in a future

While we have spent a great deal of the last year moving forward in our pursuit for equity, we have also struggled with maintaining the momentum and holding people and agencies accountable. When I speak of accountability, I speak of ensuring the things we request are delivered

Which brings me to the most recent Equity Data Portal, presented by the governor, that is incredibly lacking in substance. This portal took more than a year to be published and there is a significant lack of information. First, the Equity Data Portal showed a lack of collaboration between the Governor's Office and the existing commissions already present conducting the majority of this work.

Currently we have the Indiana Commission on the Social Status of Black Males, Interagency Council on Black & Minority Health, Indiana Commission for Women, Indiana Commission on Hispanic and Latino Affairs, Native American Indian Affairs Commission, and the Indiana Minority Health Coalition. These groups have laid the foundation for community advocacy and addressing disparities with many being commissioned by the legislature and the governor, yet still missing the mark.

Second, the overall report seemed to fall short of what is needed to truly assess minority issues and develop an action plan. The infant and mortality rate for Black women is abysmal, COVID-19 absolutely ravaged the Black and brown community, and schools are failing at an alarming rate in the state of Indiana. The Equity Data Portal does not fully articulate these and other racial disparities in the state. Third, the portal totally ignored the 2020 State of Indiana Disparity Study results of our minority, women and veteran business enterprises. The report concluded minority- and woman-owned businesses considered together exhibited a substantial disparity for Indiana Department of Administration (IDOA) contracts and procurements, indicating that those businesses only received 71 cents for every dollar one would expect them to receive based on their availability for that work. The disparity analysis further revealed that every state educational institution had a substantial disparity for this combined group. In the past, IDOA has done the best it could to meet our diversity supplier goals, but they cannot do it alone. The state has to lead by example and ensure we are practicing what we preach.

As a legislator and commission member, I highly recommend monthly meetings with the commissions to develop a statewide plan of action to improve these oversights and fully implement the recommendations from the disparity study. It is my sincere hope that this plan involves the necessary funding toward these commissions with a legislative plan on helping them succeed. Additionally, I expect more informative data from the Equity Data Portal; we need to paint a picture of all the disparities that exist within our state, not just a broad stroke. And lastly, with the establishment of the state's first chief equity, inclusion and opportunity officer, there can be no more excuses for giving breadcrumbs in our pursuit of equity and justice.

Applications accepted for Innovation School Fellowship

The Mind Trust is accepting applications for the ninth cohort of the Innovation School Fellowship, a paid fellowship that allows school leaders to spend one or two years developing a sustainable school model that offers academic excellence, diversity and equity for all students.

In addition to showing proven experience managing teams to achieve a high level of academic success and equity, applicants must provide a statement of intent, ideas for a school rooted in research and detail past results. Statements of intent are due by Jan. 9, 2022.

The Innovation Fellowship is a partnership of The Mind Trust, The Mayor's Office of Education and Innovation and Indianapolis Public Schools (IPS). Innovation Network Schools are schools located within (IPS), but school leaders have academic and operational autonomy. Innovation School Fellows will present their school model to the IPS school board for approval. Currently, there are 31 Innovation Network Schools within IPS.

For more information or to apply, visit themindtrust.org/innovation.

Named provost/ executive vice president

¹ Mattie L. Jones, Ph.D., recently was promoted to provost and executive vice president of Academic Affairs, where she will manage the university's academic programs and strategic plan. Jones was previously associate provost and dean of education, chair of Humanities and Professional Studies and director of Early Childhood Education.

"Dr. Jones has worn many hats at Martin and worn them all well in the seven years she's been with us," said Dr. Sean Huddleston, President. "This is the obvious next step for her and will be the culmination of her experience and educational background that will greatly benefit our students and the university."

During her tenure at Martin, Jones has developed programs to help students gain skills to improve their lives both personally and professionally. She has more than 20 years of experience as an administrator and professor, and she is a researcher and author of four books.

"It is my honor to serve as Provost and Executive Vice President of Martin University," said Jones. "I look forward to continuing this great work with the university's dedicated faculty, staff, and administration. Under the futurefocused leadership of President Sean Huddleston, Martin is poised to deliver an excellent educational experience that prepares its student for careers that meet the demands of today's workforce. This is truly a "communiversity" that seeks to serve."

by Kara Kavensky

In January of 2019, Esther Lewis was diagnosed with breast cancer. This was devastating to her and challenged her faith. Through some serious soul searching, she asked herself and God, "What do you want me to produce with my life?"

By October of 2019, Esther had her answer. Esther is the mother of a young Black man who's now a sophomore at Tennessee State University, she created Holistic Evolution (HE) to support male mentoring. She created an event to celebrate her successful fight with cancer and in honor of her 40th birthday, except the focus wasn't on Esther, it was on the young men attending.

"I asked God, 'What am I supposed to leave on this earth?" says Esther, who was raised in Gary. "Holistic Evolution is to provide male mentoring to young men ages 16 to 24. I called it Finding 40."

Esther has worked in youth development for over two decades. Lake County has the second highest single parent homes (1st is Indianapolis) in Indiana, so a lot of young men growing up without their fathers.

"Black men role models are scarce and I am working to bridge that gap with HE," states Esther, who incorporated her nonprofit and has a large Board of Directors for HE. "It is so important for young Black men to have positive role models in their lives."

The model of Holistic Evolution consists of:

life coaching, resource connectivity, mentorship, and a community reward system. HE currently has around 85 mentors who there is an emphasize responsibility and employability skills.

"Research shows that we can have improved health outcomes and educational outcomes with life coaching," says Esther. "We focus on future-oriented goal setting and the young men are referred to resources to help them accomplish their goals, including financial independence."

This year's event will be the HE Future Fair, held on October 14th at the Dean and Barbara White Community Center in Merrillville. The format is a college / job fair type of atmosphere. Sponsoring educational organizations and colleges will be present, as well as employers. Sponsors include cultural, spiritual, and health organizations, who will also be engaged in the event. The HE Hero sponsor is Eleven Fifty Academy.

"We are honored to sponsor this year's HE event," states Chris Hutchinson, Senior Vice President of Engagement with Eleven Fifty Academy. "Events such as the HE Future Fair are needed in every community to help young males discovery their passion and direction for their lives. Providing resources to make these vital connections helps young people feel seen and heard — and most importantly, supported."

The HE Future Fair is all about engagement and helping these young men with their future direction. They have partnered with high schools and have college and career readiness coach, Catisha Toney, of Coats, Inc., who will meet virtually with the young men ahead of the event and prep them so they know which questions to ask with the educational organizations present. HE works regularly with the Region 1 WorkOne office for resume workshops, and will hold a specially scheduled workshop ahead of this year's HE Future Fair. Also, HE Board member Joe Williams, Ret. Navy Veteran, will discuss possible military service with the young men.

"It was Joe's idea to hold a job fair," says Esther. "We hope to have military recruiters present if they are able to make it."

The following evening, a fundraising dinner will be held at the Arthouse in Gary. The HE organization is focused on impact and are measuring the experience and effectiveness of how HE is monitoring males of color in northwest Indiana. They do this through followup surveys.

"Our goal is to illuminate an attainable, successful path for these young men to ensure that their futures are bright," says Ether.

COVID-19 cases climbing, wiping out months of progress

By HEATHER HOLLING-SWORTH, CATHY BUS-SEWITZ and COLLEEN LONG Associated Press

COVID-19 deaths and cases in the U.S. have climbed back to levels not seen since last winter, erasing months of progress and potentially bolstering President Joe Biden's argument for his sweeping new vaccination requirements.

The cases — driven by the delta variant combined with resistance among some Americans to getting the vaccine are concentrated mostly in the South.

While one-time hot spots like Florida and Louisiana are improving, infection rates are soaring in Kentucky, Georgia and Tennessee, fueled by children now back in school, loose mask restrictions and low vaccination levels.

The dire situation in some hospitals is starting to sound like January's infection peak: Surgeries canceled in hospitals in Washington state and Utah. Severe staff shortages in Kentucky and Alabama. A lack of beds in Tennessee. Intensive care units at or over capacity in Texas.

The deteriorating picture nine months into the nation's vaccination drive has angered and frustrated medical professionals who see the heartbreak as preventable. The vast majority of the dead and the hospitalized have been unvaccinated, in what has proved to be a hard lesson for some families.

"The problem now is we have been trying to educate based on science, but I think most of the education that is happening now is based on tragedy, personal tragedy," said Dr. Ryan Stanton, an emergency room physician in Lexington, Kentucky.

In Kentucky, 70% of the state's hospitals -66of 96 - are reporting critical staff shortages, the highest level yet during the pandemic, the governor said.

"Our hospitals are at the brink of collapse in many communities," said Dr. Steven Stack, Kentucky's public health commissioner.

The U.S. is averaging over 1,800 COVID-19 deaths and 170,000 new cases per day, the highest levels respectively since early March and late January. And both figures have been on the rise over the past two weeks.

The country is still well below the terrifying peaks reached in January, when it was averaging about 3,400 deaths and a quarter-million cases per day.

The U.S. is dispensing about 900,000 vaccinations per day, down from a high of 3.4 million a day in mid-April. On Sept. 17, a Food and Drug Administration advisory panel will meet to discuss whether the U.S. should begin giving booster shots of the Pfizer vaccine.

On a positive note, the number of people now in the hospital with COVID-19 appears to be leveling off or even declining at around 90,000, or about where things stood in February. Last week, the presi-

Getty Images dent ordered all employers with more than 100 workers to require vaccinations or weekly tests, a measure affecting about 80 million Americans. And the roughly 17 million workers at health facilities that receive federal Medicare or Medicaid also will have to be fully vaccinated.

"We read about and hear about and we see the stories of hospitalized people, people on their deathbeds among the unvaccinated over the past few weeks," Biden said in announcing the rules. "This is a pandemic of the unvaccinated."

The requirements have met with resistance and threats of lawsuits from Republicans.

Arizona on Sept. 14 reported 117 deaths, the most in a single day since last February. Tennessee now ranks first in the U.S. in new cases per capita. Hundreds of students there have been forced to quarantine. Some schools have closed because of staffing shortages. Others have asked to switch to remote learning.

But measures aimed at containing the virus have run into opposition. Last week, a Tennessee high school student who spoke at a school board meeting in favor of a mask mandate was heckled by adults while he talked about his grandmother dying from the virus.

Stanton, the ER doctor in Kentucky, said he has admitted families where the delta variant has swept through generations, especially if the older members are unvaccinated.

"Now in Kentucky, onethird of new cases are under age 18," he said. Some children brought it home from summer camp and spread it to the rest of the family, and now, "between day care and schools and school activities, and friends getting together, there are just so many exposures."

In Alabama, hundreds of COVID-19 patients fill intensive care units, and one hospital contacted 43 others in three states to find a specialty cardiac ICU bed for Ray Martin DeMonia. It wasn't soon enough. The 73-year-old died Sept. 1.

"In honor of Ray, please get vaccinated if you have not, in an effort to free up resources for non-COVID related emergencies," his family pleaded in his obituary.

In Hidalgo County, Texas, along the Mexican border, about 50 patients were in the hospital with COVID-19 on a given day in July. By early August, the number had soared to over 600.

"Back in July we were almost celebrating. Little did we know," said Ivan Melendez, public health authority for Hidalgo County. The situation has improved, with just under 300 people in the hospital as of Sept. 13, but ICUs are still above 90% capacity, Melendez said.

The biggest surge over the summer occurred in states that had low vaccination rates, particularly in the South, where many people rely on air conditioning and breathe recirculated air, said Linsey Marr, a professor of civil and environmental engineering at Virginia Tech. She said states farther north could see upticks as the onset of cold weather sends people indoors.

Vaccination rates are not as low in some Northern states, but "there's still a lot of unvaccinated people out there. Delta is going to find them," Marr said.

Fruits and vegetables add nutrients to your diet that help protect you from heart disease, stroke and some cancers. Choosing vegetables, fruits, nuts, and other produce over high-calorie foods can also help with weight management. Sometimes, though, raw fruits and vegetables contain harmful germs, such as Salmonella, E. coli and Listeria, that can cause illness. In the United States, nearly half of foodborne illnesses are caused by germs on fresh produce.

The safest produce is cooked; the next safest is washed. Enjoy uncooked fruits and vegetables while taking steps to avoid foodborne illness, also known as food poisoning.

Sprouts are a particular concern because the warm, humid conditions needed to grow sprouts also are ideal for germs to multiply. Eating raw or lightly cooked sprouts may lead to food poisoning. Avoiding raw sprouts is especially important for those who are more likely to get seriously sick from food poisoning, which includes pregnant women, young children, older adults, and people with weakened immune systems. When shopping for fresh produce at the grocery store or farmer's market, choose produce that isn't bruised or damaged; keep pre-cut fruits and vegetables cold by choosing produce that is refrigerated or kept on ice; and, separate fruits and vegetables from raw meat, poultry, and seafood in your shopping cart and in your grocery bags.

When preparing fruits and vegetables at home, follow these healthy tips:

(https://www.cdc.gov/features/handwashing/)Wash hands, kitchen utensils, and food preparation surfaces,

Keep fruits and vegetables separate from raw foods from animals, such as meat, poultry and seafood.

Refrigerate fruits and vegetables that have been cut, peeled or cooked within two hours (or one hour if the outside temperature is 90 degrees or warmer). Chill them at 40 degrees Fahrenheit or colder in a clean container.

Consuming dangerous foodborne bacteria will usually cause illness within 1 to 3 days of eating the contaminated food. However, sickness can also occur within 20 minutes or up to six weeks later.

Although most people will recover from a foodborne illness within a short period of time, some can develop chronic, severe, or even life-threatening health problems. Foodborne illness can sometimes be confused with other illnesses that have similar symptoms. The symptoms of foodborne illness can include vomiting, diarrhea, and abdominal pain, as well as flu-like symptoms, such as fever, headache, and body ache.

If you think that you or a family member has a foodborne illness, contact your healthcare provider immediately. To learn more, visit the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention website at CDC. gov/foodsafety, or contact the Marion County Public Health Department's Food and Consumer Safety department at 317-221-2222.

Louisiana residents thankful for small miracles after Ida

By MATT SEDENSKY and AARON MORRISON Associated Press

MARRERO, La. (AP) — Amid the devastation caused by Hurricane Ida, there was at least one bright light Sunday: Parishioners found that electricity had been restored to their church outside of New Orleans, a small improvement as residents of Louisiana struggle to regain some aspects of normal life.

In Jefferson Parish, the Rev. G. Amaldoss expected to celebrate Mass at St. Joachim Catholic Church in the parking lot, which was dotted with downed limbs. But when he swung open the doors of the church early Sunday, the sanctuary was bathed in light. That made an indoor service possible.

"Divine intervention," Amaldoss said, pressing his hands together and looking toward the sky.

A week after Hurricane Ida struck, many in Louisiana continue to face food, water and gas shortages as well as power outages while battling heat and humidity. The storm was blamed for at least 17 deaths in Louisiana, Mississippi and Alabama.

Among the dead announced by state health officials included a 74-year-old man who died of heat during an extensive power outage. In the Northeast, Ida's remnants dumped record-breaking rain and killed at least 50 people from Virginia to Connecticut.

As Sunday Mass began, Amaldoss walked down the aisle of the church in his green robe, with just eight people spread among the pews. Instead, the seats brimmed with boxes of donated toothpaste, shampoo and canned vegetables.

"For all the people whose lives are saved and all the people whose lives are lost, we pray for them," he said.

"Remember the brothers and sisters driven by the wind and the water."

Through the wall of windows behind the altar, beyond the swamp abutting the church, the floodgates that saved the building could be seen. The Gospel was the story of Jesus bringing sight to a blind man, and throughout the tiny church, stories of miracles were repeated.

Wynonia Lazaro gave thanks for newly restored power in her home, where the only casualties of Ida were some downed trees and loosened shingles.

"We are extremely blessed," she said.

Some parishioners suffered total losses of their homes, or devastating damage. Gina Caulfield, a 64-year-old retired teacher, has been hopping from relative to relative after her cousin's trailer, where she'd been living, was left uninhabitable. Still, she was grateful to have survived the storm.

"It's a comfort to know we have people praying for us," she said.

Some parishes outside New Orleans were battered for hours by winds of 100 mph (160 kph) or more, and Ida damaged or destroyed more than 22,000 power poles, more than hurricanes Katrina, Zeta and Delta combined.

Fully restoring electricity to some places in the state's southeast could take until the end of the month, according to Phillip May, president and CEO of Entergy, which provides power to New Orleans and other areas in the storm's path.

Entergy is in the process of acquiring air boats and other equipment needed to get power crews into swampy and marshy regions. May said many grocery stores, pharmacies and other businesses are a high priority.

"We will continue to work until every last light is on," he said during a briefing.

In Jean Lafitte, a small town of about 2,000 people, pools of water along the roadway were receding and some of the thick mud left behind was beginning to dry.

At St. Anthony Church, the 4 feet (about 1.2 meters) of water once inside had seeped away, but a slippery layer of muck remained. Outside, the faithful sat on folding metal chairs under a blue tent to celebrate Mass. Next door, at the Piggly Wiggly, military police in fatigues stood guard.

"In times such like these, we come together and we help one another," the Rev. Luke Nguyen, the church's pastor, told a few dozen congregants.

Ronny Dufrene, a 39-yearold oil field worker from Lafayette, returned to his hometown to help.

"People are taking pictures of where their houses used to be," he said. "But this is a chance to get together and praise God for what we do have, and that's each other."

In New Orleans, many churches remained closed due to lingering power outages.

But First Grace United Methodist Church opened its doors and held service without power. Sunlight from large windows brightened the sanctuary, where about 10 people sat.

"Whatever situation you're in, you get to choose how you see it," said Pastor Shawn Anglim, whose first time pastoring the congregation was after the church recovered from Hurricane Katrina 16 years ago. "You can see it from a place of faith, a place of hope and a place of love, and a place of possibility."

Jennifer Moss, who attended service with her husband, Tom, said power had been restored to their home.

"We've been blessed throughout this entire ordeal," she said. "That storm could have been a little closer to the east, and we wouldn't have a place to come and worship."

In Lafitte, about 28 miles (45 kilometers) south of New Orleans, animal control officer Koby Bellanger experienced his own little blessing after he heard the sounds of an animal crying as he rode through the flooded streets with a sheriff's deputy.

Bellanger waded through the water and found a tiny, greeneyed black kitten clinging to the engine of a car outside a devastated house. He hoisted the animal up, to the delight of Lafayette Parish Deputy Rebecca Bobzin.

"Bring him!" Bobzin screamed in delight.

Louisiana's 13 storm-related deaths included five nursing home residents evacuated ahead of the hurricane along with hundreds of other seniors to a warehouse in Louisiana, where health officials said conditions became unsafe. State Health Officer Dr. Joseph Kanter ordered the immediate closure of the seven nursing facilities that sent residents to the warehouse.

Morrison reported from New Orleans. Associated Press writer Denise Lavoie in Richmond, Virginia, contributed.

One religion says its bridging the racial divide by overcoming the challenges of an interracial marriage

By STACY BROWN NNPA NEWSWIRE

When Greg Watson began dating the woman of his dreams 30 years ago, he barely noticed the contrast in their skin colors.

"It wasn't an issue," he recalls after three decades with his wife, Jody. "We weren't brought up to see people that way."

Not everyone in his rural community agreed, however.

Greg remembers the first times he noticed heads shaking in disapproval as a Black man with a white woman. Suddenly, he couldn't get the issue off his mind.

"When we would go out, Jody would caution me, 'Why do you keep looking over your shoulder?" said Greg.

"I would say, 'You just never know." According to the Pew Research Center, one in six new marriages is now interracial. However, while statistics suggest that interracial marriages in America have gained greater acceptance, not all couples have that experience.

Still, they have found ways to cope.

Shared religious faith, along with a community of fellow believers, has been invaluable in navigating the cultural complexities.

Greg and Jody grew up worshipping and associating with a diverse group of people in their congregation of Jehovah's Witnesses.

So, neither their families nor their fellow congregants were surprised when they began to date and later married.

The experience was similar for Monifa and Isaac Homza's multiracial, multi-generational clan.

Monifa's Nigerian-Caribbean father and Korean mother were often a curiosity in their New York City neighborhood. But at home, the children could see their peaceful and loving relationship, Monifa said.

"They took care of each other despite what was happening around them."

Meanwhile, Isaac grew up in rural Virginia, where he observed the racial divide daily on his bus ride to school.

As he passed two churches that shared a parking lot, he noticed that the lot divided attendees by race.

"It seemed strange to me because, at our congregation, we all met together," Isaac said.

The couple eventually met through a mutual friend when Isaac moved to New York to work at the headquarters of Jehovah's Witnesses with volunteers worldwide.

Monifa was immediately drawn to Isaac's piercing blue eyes. As for Isaac, there was no question: "I thought she was beautiful."

A similar sense of humor and willingness to expand their cultural horizons helped too.

The couple might never have come to be if the prior generation hadn't overcome their own cultural biases.

Monifa's father made significant changes once he started studying the Bible and saw that all races are equal in God's sight.

He widened his circle of friends, met Monifa's mother, and later welcomed his white son-in-law into the family.

"It was heartwarming to me because I knew the background my dad had and the prejudices he held," said Monifa.

"It's not the way you look. It's what you are on the inside."

Now living in Maui, the Homzas are working to impart the same qualities to their three children as part of a Hawaiian-language congregation.

"One of the Bible principles we try to teach them is a love of neighbor," Monifa added. "We don't categorize people. We love people of all races."

According to a study conducted by the University of Utah, married couples who had shared values reported higher levels of marital happiness and individual well-being than those who did not.

The Watsons agree that love, loyalty, and faith are among the shared values on which they base their marriage and family life.

They credit daily Bible reading and prayer with helping them to communicate on a deeper level with one another, especially when differences of opinion come into play.

"When you have differences," said Jody, "you have a base to go back to — God's standards."

Greg agreed:

"Our cohesiveness has been our faith and applying principles. In the Bible, it said that God made the two one, and we take that very seriously."

Now retired and with no children at home, the Watsons hike, bike and spend time in a volunteer ministry with each other.

"We spend all of our time together," Greg said. "Things just seem to be getting better and better."

SPIRITUAL OUTLOOK

By PRESTON T. ADAMS III

"Pure and undefiled religion before God and the Father is this: to visit orphans and widows in their trouble, and to keep oneself unspotted from the world." James 1:27

According to Google, religion is defined as "belief in a god or gods and the activities that are connected with this belief, such as praying or worshipping in a building such as a church or temple. A religion is a particular system of belief in a god or gods and the activities that are connected with this system."

Scholars define religion as follows: "A religion is a unified system of beliefs and practices relative to sacred things, that is to say, things set apart and forbidden — beliefs and practices which unite into one single." Merriam-Webster defines religion as "the state of being religious; the service and worship of God or the supernatural; a commitment or devotion to religious faith or observance."

Religious individuals and institutions are challenged daily with addressing matters such as the rising tide of violence and homicides in our city and nationwide; the emerging battle between the vaccinated and the unvaccinated; the reality that COVID-19 and its associated illnesses, along with the disruption and death that have not gone away; schools quarantining entire classrooms and some have even returned to an all virtual classroom approach; hospitals once again delaying elective surgeries and limiting visitations; and politics taking center stage with red and blue states battling against each other regarding the best way to handle the newest surge.

The Apostle James pens a letter to the Isrealites of the 12 tribes scattered abroad. He writes these believers as a true servant of God sending greetings. He admonishes them to count it all joy and be patient. They must endure the hardships they are facing. He reminds: if you need anything, ask God who is the ultimate source and supplier of all our needs.

When asking, one must ask in faith and not waiver. Don't be double-minded for a double-minded person is unstable in all their ways. He again encourages them to endure temptation for a crown awaits those who endure.

The Apostle then makes a powerful and poignant pivot in his commentary. "Therefore..." he notes, "be slow to speak, be slow to wrath, lay aside naughtiness, and be doers of the Word and not just hearers." Here's why this pivot is powerful. Here is the central message. Here's how we apply James' biblical definition of religion, specifically "pure religion and undefiled religion."

First, "pure religion" helps those who are in distress. If our religion is pure, if our devotion to Christ is pure, if we truly want to represent the Christian faith well, we must help those who are in distress. And who are those in distress? Orphans (the fatherless) and widows (those whose spouses have passed on to glory).

Finally, "pure and undefiled religion before God" means we must keep ourselves unspotted from the world. We must subdue our passions. This means we must walk upright and circumvent our proclivity toward sin. We work daily to conquer our flesh. And we must remember that immoral, illicit or illegal activity of one believer reflects squarely on all believers! Getty Images

Pure religion is obtainable through submission to the guidance of the Holy Spirit. If we want to truly please God we must practice pure religion here on Earth. Then, and only then, will we hear our God say to us, "Well done, good and faithful servant."

Vendor events help bring life back to malls

By TYLER FENWICK tylerf@indyrecorder.com

Circle Centre Mall has kept the lights on, but there's much less to illuminate now than there used to be, especially on the south end opposite the food court.

That's where Lee Johnson has set up shop, next to the now-closed Express and above the now-closed Forever 21. Johnson has hosted three multi-day vendor events, featuring small business owners selling everything from perfume and cologne to art and T-shirts.

"I've seen events like this go crazy," he said on a recent Friday morning while he set up for another event.

Across town at Washington Square Mall on the east side, Tevin Studdard has dreams of doing the same for a mall that struggles to drive traffic outside of the Target that's attached to it.

There were 133 vendors stretched through the mall halls at the first large event in early September. There was heavy foot traffic browsing the lineup and popping into other mall stores, and that was on a weekday afternoon.

"If you can get hundreds of people to show up at Washington Square on a Wednesday afternoon, there's no telling what you can do on a Saturday," Studdard said.

That's why Studdard feels the expectations to help revive the mall. It's not that he feels pressure, though.

"I feel opportunity," he said.

The next event at Washington Square Mall is Oct. 2. There will also be a talent show with a $1,000 prize Oct. 16. The next vendor event at Circle Centre Mall is Sept. 24-26. There's room for 35 vendors. Contact Johnson at 317-389-6304 to learn how to get involved.

Johnson, who has a line of air fresheners, said he started his event because he wants to break "generational curses." Black culture has influenced much of American life, but Black people still don't get enough opportunities.

Johnson was laid off from a job in insurance in 2012 and remembers wanting to break down in tears because he wasn't sure how he would be able to take care of his family.

"I just told myself I'm never gonna let this happen again," he said. "I'm never gonna have this feeling again."

Studdard, who went viral in 2020 for his Long's Bakery music video, spends the majority of weekdays between events filming a cooking show with Black chefs and Black-owned restaurants.

"The goal is to highlight Black-owned businesses and provide them a platform where they can sustain financially," he said. "It's like putting them in positions to win financially."

Washington Square Mall, like many other malls around the country, doesn't get as much traffic as it used to.

ENTREPRENEUR 'RAVAGANZA

Lee Johnson hosts Entrepreneur Extravaganza, a vendor event at Circle Centre Mall, twice a month.

Upcoming events: Sept. 24-26, Oct. 8-10 and more into April 2022

• Where: Circle Centre Mall, 49 W. Maryland St., on the third floor

• Want to be a vendor? Contact Johnson at 317-389-6304

TEVINS VISION

Tevin Studdard started Tevins Vision, a store at Washington Square Mall that hosts vendor events and other opportunities for small business owners.

• Upcoming events: Vendor event Oct. 2, talent show Oct. 16

• Where: Washington Square Mall, 10202 E. Washington St.

New Rates

As an historic publication that has served the Indianapolis community for nearly 124 years, it's with regret that the Recorder must raise its rates for legal notices.

Over the past few vears there have been undeniable increases in the cost of the paper yet our company has absorbed the costs without increasing rates. Unfortunately, that is no longer feasible as costs continue to skyrocket. While our rates will increase effective Jan. 1. 2019. the rates are still lower than other media outlets.

We want to thank you for all the support you have shown us and ask for your continued support.

If you have any questions, please do not hesitate to call Rapheal Matthew at (317) 924-5143 or email legals@ indyrecorder.com dianapolis, Marion County, Indiana. The project is located along I-465, from the eastern I-465/I-70 interchange to the southern I-465/I-65 interchange, on the southeast side of Indianapolis. The project limits encompass I-465, five service interchanges with I-465 and three system interchanges. The five service interchanges include I-465 at US 40 (Washington Street), US 52 (Brookville Road). Shadeland Avenue, South eastern Avenue (Old US 421), and Emerson Avenue. The system interchanges include I-465 with I-70 I-74 and I-65 The preferred alternative includes adding ramp metering to each of the service interchanges'entrance ramps to I-465 and installing virtual speed limit (VSL) signage and dynamic message signs (DMS) along the mainline of I-465. Ramp meters are traffic signals installed on freeway on-ramps to control the frequency at which vehicles enter the flow of traffic on the freeway. Ramp metering reduces overall freeway congestion by managing the amount of traffic entering the freeway and by breaking up platoons that make it difficult to merge onto the freeway. VSLs are speed limits that change based on road, traffic, and weather conditions. VSLs help improve safety by restricting speeds during adverse conditions. The speed limit will increase or decrease in 5 mph to 10 mph increments based

All proposed work is limited to the entrance ramps of the five service interchanges and minimal improvements along mainline I-465. Ramp metering signals will be added at each of the proposed I-465 entrance ramps. Additionally. VSL and DMS signage are proposed to be periodically placed, roughly every 0.5 mile, along mainline I-465. Incidental work consists of the placement of two static warning signs and DMS equipment The newly constructed VSL. DMS, and ramp meter signals will be controlled by INDOT's Traffic Management Center (TMC). In order to connect the new equipment to the existing fiber optic backbone, directional drilling/boring beneath the I-465 roadway and embankment will occur. An additional lane is proposed at each of the I-465 entrance ramps at the Emerson Avenue interchange. These existing entrance ramps will be reconfigured through restriping and by utilizing the existing shoulders to accommodate the third lane without widening. All of the other interchanges entrance ramps will stay in their existing configuration. The proposed maintenance of traffic (MOT) will allow all through lanes and ramps to remain open with the exception of temporary, short-term nighttime work, which will require short spans of the inside lane along I-465 and the proposed I-465 service interchanges'entrance ramps to be closed. NOTICE TO BIDDERS The Indianapolis Public Transportation Corporation d/b/a IndyGo ("IPTC") will be releasing an Invitation for Bid and related Bid and Contract Documents ("Solicitation Documents") for construction of Purple Line Bus Rapid Transit Project (BRT) Phase 1 By law, transit agencies such as IPTC are required to protect sensitive security information ("SSI"). SSI is any information whose disclosure may compromise the security of the traveling public, transit employees or transit infrastructure. Certain pages that are included in the architec-tural/engineering and design documents and specifications for the Project contain SSI. Protecting SSI means restricting its distribution and controlling access to it. Only persons with a "need to know may access SSI. Potential bidders for this Project, including subcontractors, regardless of whether such potential bidder ultimately bids on the Project are considered individuals/ entities with a "need to know" this SSI. To access Solicitation Documents containing SSI: Because IPTC must restrict access to and distribution of SSI, IPTC will be posting the Solicitation Documents to a secure document site. To obtain access to the secure documents, potential bidders will be required to execute a non-disclosure agreement which addresses the appropriate handling, storage, use, reproduction, transmittal and destruction of the SSI ("NDA"). Solicitation Documents containing SSI will only be released to those executing an NDA. All prime bidders to IPTC must execute an NDA.

The required NDA is available for download now on the IPTC website https://www.indygo.net/procurement/bid-opportunities/ nda-ifb-21-05-385-purpleline-bus-rapid-transit-project/ it will be mandatory to receive signed NDA before releasing access to secured documents to the IPTC Procurement Department via email to Procurement@indygo.net/ dadamson@indygo.net . A complete package of the Solicitation Documents (SSI and non-SSI) site access will be Emailed to Bidder Email Address listed on signed NDA form.

Most states have cut back public health powers amid pandemic

By LAUREN WEBER and ANNA MARIA BARRY-JESTER KHN (Kaiser Health News)

Republican legislators in more than half of U.S. states, spurred on by voters angry about lockdowns and mask mandates, are taking away the powers that state and local officials use to protect the public against infectious diseases.

A Kaiser Health News review of hundreds of pieces of legislation found that, in all 50 states, legislators have proposed bills to curb such public health powers since the COVID-19 pandemic began. While some governors vetoed bills that passed, at least 26 states pushed through laws that permanently weaken government authority to protect public health. In three additional states, an executive order, ballot initiative or state Supreme Court ruling limited long-held public health powers. More bills are pending in a handful of states whose legislatures are still in session.

In Arkansas, legislators banned mask mandates except in private businesses or state-run health care settings, calling them "a burden on the public peace, health, and instead of the virus, have become the enemy. They argue this will have consequences that last long beyond this pandemic, diminishing their ability to fight the latest COVID-19 surge and future disease outbreaks, such as being able to quarantine people during a measles outbreak.

"It's kind of like having your hands tied in the middle of a boxing match," said Kelley Vollmar, executive director of the Jefferson County Health Department in Missouri.

But proponents of the new limits say they are a necessary check on executive powers and give lawmakers a voice in prolonged emergencies. Arkansas state Sen. Trent Garner, a Republican who co-sponsored his state's successful bill to ban mask mandates, said he was trying to reflect the will of the people.

"What the people of Arkansas want is the decision to be left in their hands, to them and their family," Garner said. "It's time to take the power away from the socalled experts, whose ideas have been woefully inadequate."

After initially signing the bill, Gov. Asa Hutchinson, R-Ark., expressed regret, calling a special legislative session in early August to ask lawmakers to carve out an exception for schools. Lawmakers declined. The law is currently blocked by an Arkansas judge who deemed it unconstitutional. Legal battles are ongoing in other states as well.

funded public health workforce was consumed by trying to implement the largest vaccination campaign in U.S. history and had little time for political action.

Freeman said her city and county health officials group has meager influence and resources, especially in comparison with the American Legislative Exchange Council, a corporate-backed conservative group that promoted a model bill to restrict the emergency powers of governors and other officials. The draft legislation appears to have inspired dozens of state-level bills, according to the KHN review. At least 15 states passed laws limiting emergency powers. In some states, governors can no longer institute mask mandates or close businesses, and their executive orders can be overturned by legislators.

When North Dakota's legislative session began in January, a long slate of bills sought to rein in public health powers, including one with language similar to ALEC's. The state didn't have a health director to argue against the new limits because three had resigned in 2020.

Fighting the bills not only took time, but also seemed dangerous,

The ACS II is responsible for helping to support the achievements of the mission and overall goals of the Indianapolis Airport Authority by helping to ensure that the objectives of the Airport AOC/EOC are attained.

President Joe Biden last week announced sweeping vaccination measures, saying he was forced legislation. "My plan also takes on elected officials in states that lifesaving actions," he said.

The KHN review showed that:

-In at least 16 states, legislators have limited the power of public health officials to order mask mandates, or quarantines or isolation. In some cases, they gave themselves or local elected politicians the authority to prevent the spread of infectious disease.

-At least 17 states passed laws banning COVID-19 vaccine mandates or passports or made it easier to get around vaccine requirements.

 At least nine states have new laws banning or limiting mask mandates. Executive orders or a court ruling limit mask requirements in five more.

Much of this legislation takes effect as COVID-19 hospitalizations in some areas are climbing to the highest numbers at any point in the pandemic, and children are back in school.

"We really could see more people sick, hurt, hospitalized or even die, depending on the extremity of the legislation and curtailing of the authority," said Lori Tremmel Freeman, head of the National Association of County and City Health Officials.

Public health academics and officials are frustrated that they,

A deluge of bills In Ohio, legislators gave themselves the power to overturn health orders and weakened school vaccine mandates. In Utah and Iowa, schools cannot require masks. In Alabama, state and local governments cannot issue vaccine passports and schools cannot require COVID-19 vaccinations.

The Montana Legislature passed some of the most restrictive laws of all, severely curbing public health's quarantine and isolation powers, increasing local elected officials' power over local health boards, preventing limits on religious gatherings and banning employers - including in health care settings — from requiring vaccinations for COVID-19, the flu or anything else.

Legislators there also passed limits on local officials: If jurisdictions add public health rules stronger than state public health measures, they could lose 20% of some grants.

Losing the ability to order quarantines has left Karen Sullivan, health officer for Montana's Butte-Silver Bow Health Department, terrified about what's to come, not only during the COVID-19 pandemic but for future measles and whooping cough outbreaks.

"In the midst of delta and other variants that are out there, we're quite frankly a nervous wreck about it," Sullivan said. "Relying on morality and goodwill is not a good public health practice."

While some public health officials tried to fight the national wave of legislation, the under-said Renae Moch, public health director for Bismarck, who testified against a measure prohibiting mask mandates. She then received an onslaught of hate mail and demands for her to be fired.

Lawmakers overrode the governor's veto to pass the bill into law. The North Dakota Legislature also banned businesses from asking whether patrons are vaccinated against or infected with the coronavirus and curbed the governor's emergency powers.

The new laws are meant to reduce the power of governors and restore the balance of power between states' executive branches and legislatures, said Jonathon Hauenschild, director of the ALEC task force on communications and technology. "Governors are elected, but they were delegating a lot of authority to the public health official, often that they had appointed," Hauenschild said.

'Like turning off a light switch'

When the Indiana Legislature overrode the governor's veto to pass a bill that gave county commissioners the power to review public health orders, it was devastating for Dr. David Welsh, the public health officer in rural Ripley County.

People immediately stopped calling him to report COVID-19 violations, because they knew the county commissioners could overturn his authority. It was "like turning off a light switch," Welsh said.

Another county in Indiana has already seen its health department's mask mandate overridden by the local commissioners, Welsh said.

Sustainable Sustenance How to eat for a better Earth

(Family Features)

Although good nutrition is essential for human life, food production has a significant impact on the environment. Taking a more sustainable approach to sustaining your body can help protect the Earth and its climate.

Food production accounts for more than one-fourth of all greenhouse gas emissions, according to a report compiled by "Our World in Data." Learn how you can fill your plate with more earthfriendly foods by practicing these sustainable habits

It's Not Just What You Eat

When it comes to food and sustainability, what you eat is only part of the equation. How you go about getting your food also affects the total impact of your food consumption on the environment.

Grow Your Own Food

Gardening offers many benefits beyond the bounty of your harvest. Spending time outdoors in the sunshine is good for the soul while the foods you raise provide a convenient source of nutrition. Picking fresh produce from your backyard means you're bypassing transportation, packaging and many of the other aspects of food production that are detrimental to the environment. What's more, you get to enjoy the satisfaction of knowing you're personally responsible for the food on your plate.

Reduce Food Waste

An estimated 30-40% of the United States' food supply goes to waste each year, according to the U.S. Department of Agriculture (USDA). Not only could this food be helping hungry people, it's taking up valuable space. USDA data shows food waste is the single largest category of material in U.S. landfills.

There are numerous easy ways you can do your part to ensure food is being used wisely. Be sure food is stored properly to prevent it from going bad before you eat it. At the grocery store, select "ugly" foods that may be misshapen or look unusual but are still fully edible. Plan your meals so you use ingredients (across multiple meals, if necessary) and either avoid leftovers or repurpose them into another meal. Avoid overeating, which has a negative impact on your health, wastes food resources and increases environmental impacts from processing and transportation.

Buy Climate-Friendly Foods

Choosing snacks that share your commitment to the climate can make a big difference. Not only does it help you feel better about the foods you eat, supporting brands that make the environment a priority can raise the bar for others. One example is Airly crackers, which are made with 100% wholesome oats and grains, and grown through a farming process that removes carbon dioxide from the air. The company also invests in agricultural and forestry projects by purchasing carbon credits to offset its production and transportation footprint.

The carbon footprint is on the back of each box, so you can see how many grams of carbon dioxide you are helping to remove from the air while satisfying a snack craving. Look for four flavor varieties packed with sweet and savory notes including cheddar, sea salt, chocolate and salted caramel.

Shop in Season

Eating fresh produce that's in season isn't just delicious; it's better for the Earth. Typically, extensive resources are required to make foods available out of season, such as transportation to transfer food from a more productive growing climate or energy resources to create artificial growing conditions in heated greenhouses. Alternatives include buying extra foods while they're in season and preserving them or using minimally processed alternatives like frozen or canned foods.

Be Conscious of Processing and Packaging

In general, foods with more packaging have a bigger impact on the environment. While some degree of packaging is necessary to safely preserve and transport food, choosing options with minimal recyclable packaging is a step you can take to help reduce how the food you eat affects the Earth.

Know Where it Comes From

Locally produced foods travel a shorter distance, which means they require less handling and transportation. That's good news for the environment and it's a simple way to support your community, too. Knowing more about the sources of your food goes beyond eating local. You can also make purchases from brands that promote sustainable agriculture and take meaningful steps to protect the environment, animals and natural habitats.

Learn more about foods that make a difference at airlyfoods. com.

Transportation: When most people think about the cost of transportation on the climate, they're thinking about food production. However, your own transportation to and from the store adds up, too. Plan your shopping trips responsibly so you're making as few trips as possible.

Shopping bags: They may be recyclable, but the Environmental Protection Agency estimates only about 10% of plastic bags actually get recycled. The majority of the rest end up in landfills. Consider using paper or investing in sturdy reusable bags instead.

Bulk purchases: Buying in bulk may help save money, but it's also a way to cut down on frequent shopping trips and significantly reduce the packaging that results from smaller, individually wrapped items.

Colts fans, the problem isn't your quarterback

By DANNY BRIDGES

Carson Wentz has been a marked man since the day the Indianapolis Colts acquired him from the Philadelphia Eagles. It's just that simple.

Is he healthy, and can he stay that way for the entire year?

Throw in some training camp drama that included a surgeon performing a "minor" procedure on his foot and the personal decision to not take a COVID-19 vaccination and risk his availability to play, and you've got more than enough concerns about a guy who's trying to resuscitate his NFL career.

With very little time to prepare in training camp, it was logical to think Wentz would be at the very least rusty, and maybe even terrible, in his Colts debut against the Seattle Seahawks.

After watching Wentz rather intently the entire game, it was pretty obvious that while he's not a threat to challenge the usual suspects in the NFL for the MVP award, he's not the reason the Colts lost their home opener.

While his statistics weren't exactly eye-popping, they did not cause anyone an easy target for the complete team to dial 911. Wentz finished the day with collapse we witnessed. 25 completions on 38 attempts for 251 yards and two touchdowns, and no interceptions, on a day when he was constantly under pressure.

The real telltale stats say he dropped back 41 times and got hit in some fashion on 15 of those, including being sacked four times.

With virtually no time to throw and no game-breaking threat at wide receiver, Wentz actually, at the very least, exceeded any reasonable expectations one could foster but undoubtedly took the majority of the blame from season ticket holders to armchair QBs for the defeat.

I mean, forget about the makeshift line that couldn't protect him or give their running game a puncher's chance; it was all on Wentz, if you asked any of those faithful in attendance. Not to mention a number of individuals in the media who are placing far too much blame at his feet as well.

The guy couldn't rush Russell Wilson or line up at cornerback to shut down the Seattle passing attack, but he's still Injuries and a lack of talent and depth on this Colts roster is the real story, and none of those who predicted a division title and a deep playoff run want to talk about anything but the quarterback play.

Things won't get any easier for the Colts this weekend when a team that many feel is better than the Seahawks comes calling, but the reality is the Los Angeles Rams are a talented, well coached team that's planning a victory celebration at an altitude of 41,000 feet as they charter back to California.

Wentz will undoubtedly continue to be under the microscope, and rightfully so.

That's the trade-off when you're a highly paid signal caller in today's NFL, but let's all take a deep breath and chase it with a dose of reality and look at this Colts team for what it is. The words deeply flawed come to mind, and there's nowhere to hide in professional football when that's the case. Go ahead and blame Wentz all you want, but until some proficient play from the offensive line occurs, and a resemblance of a pass rush emerges, nothing will change.

Blaming the quarterback may be fashionable, but it's not even remotely accurate. Then again, Colts fans don't want to hear that. The truth can be pesky, and we certainly don't want that to get in the way of lofty expectations and victories.

A reality check is clearly past due regarding this roster, and that's never something a fan loves to admit. You pay to get in and I don't, but that doesn't change the situation one bit.

Here's the point where I'd normally say you're welcome, but I'll refrain. I'm not always right (really?) but booing Wentz at this juncture is just plain wrong and without merit.

See you Sunday, and don't pour a watered-down soda on me simply because you disagree.

Danny Bridges, who will now undoubtedly be accused of being Carson Wentz's public relations representative, can be reached at 317-370-8447 or bridgeshd@aol.com.
