Hoosiers try to find footing in job market

By TYLER FENWICK tylerf@indyrecorder.com

Kimberly Simmons has heard the tropes about people being too lazy and not wanting to work. It's a tempting analysis with all of the "Now Hiring" signs outside of businesses, but Simmons, who manages a workforce development program, tries to keep participants focused on the positive, telling them they can leave the CO-VID-19 pandemic in better shape than they started.

Participation in the New Beginnings program at Indianapolis Urban League declined during the pandemic, Simmons said, but those who enroll now do so because they have an opportunity to find jobs they wouldn't have considered before.

"They're stepping out on faith in hopes of securing positions with a livable wage with better conditions,"

Simmons said.

The job market is in an odd place low unemployment, high labor participation, lots of job openings — as it stabilizes after getting knocked around during the height of the pandemic.

The most recent employment report from the state showed the unemployment rate at 2.2% in April. Labor participation was up to 62.6%, slightly higher than the national average of 62.2%. The total labor force, which includes the employed and those seeking employment, was at 3,347,813, an increase of 15,383 from March.

Department of Workforce Development Commissioner Fred Payne said the combination of a low unemployment rate and lots of job openings means there are good opportunities for people either looking to change jobs or get back into the workforce.

Haughville and Martindale-Brightwood will soon have new trails and greenways designed to improve pedestrian and bicycling safety and connect underserved communities.

The Central Indiana Community Foundation (CICF) received a $25 million grant from Lilly Endowment Inc. to "significantly expand and enhance" pedestrian and bicycle infrastructure in Marion County, according to Michael Kaufmann, project manager. The initiative is a part of the Connected Communities Initiative in collaboration with the city of Indianapolis. The grant will be used to build new trails, connect old ones, create better pedestrian access and safety, and invest in programming partnerships, Kaufmann said. Partners include Freewheelin' Community Bikes, Bikes Indianapolis, Greenways Partnership, Groundwork Indy and Indiana Pacers Bikeshare.

about the project began in 2015. Convening with different entities has helped CICF prioritize investments to better serve people with disabilities, people of color, households without vehicles and people living in poverty because they often lack adequate infrastructure. Indianapolis and Seattle are comparable in size, Kaufmann said, but Indy has more urban sprawl, making it harder for people to get to places they need to go without adequate infrastructure. The

Central Indiana's lack of public transportation limits access to good jobs

"There's so many different innovations about, there's all these tools of transportation, but most of these innovations, if they're not a car, are not safe on the road," Payne said. "On a busy road, even bikes against busy traffic, cars going 50 mph, that is not safe. So, this provides infrastructure that really changes people's quality of life and their health. If they use it correctly, it'll get them where they want to go in a safe, beautiful way. It's about humans, not about automobiles."

Gunman kills 19 children, 2 teachers in Texas school rampage

By ACACIA CORONADO and JIM VERTUNO Associated Press

UVALDE, Texas (AP) – The 18-year-old gunman who slaughtered 19 children and two teachers at a Texas elementary school barricaded himself inside a single classroom and "began shooting anyone that was in his way," authorities said May 25 in detailing the latest mass killing to rock the U.S.

Law enforcement officers eventually broke into the classroom and killed the gunman, who used an AR-style rifle. Police and others responding to the May 24 attack also went around breaking windows at the school to enable students and teachers to escape, Lt. Christopher Olivarez of the Texas Department

Indianapolis principal brings home lessons from Alabama civil rights landmarks tour

By ELIZABETH GABRIEL

An Indianapolis Public School's district principal wants to use his recent tour of Alabama sites important to the Civil Rights Movement to improve students' educational experiences.

Arturo Rodriguez is principal of the Newcomers Program, an IPS program that serves sixth through ninth grade English language learners who are new to Indianapolis. He was a recipient of the 2022 Indiana Remembrance Coalition Scholarship, which allowed him to travel to Alabama with members of St. Luke's United Methodist Church last month.

Before the 10-hour bus ride to Montgomery, Rodriguez had only read about and watched documentaries on some of the pivotal moments in civil rights history. Visiting these sites with about 30 other people gave him a better understanding of how to teach the events of that time period to students.

The tour stopped at locations such as the National Legacy Museum, the National Memorial for Peace and Justice, Brown Chapel AME Church and the Edmund Pettus

Bridge in Selma, where state police attacked civil rights marchers on what's now called "Bloody Sunday."

"One of the most powerful moments was really crossing that bridge together with these people that I'd never known," Rodriguez said. "It was really about honoring the past."

IPS' student population, excluding innovation charter schools, was 40% Black and nearly 32% Hispanic last school year.

In response to social justice protests in Indianapolis and across the country, in June 2020 the IPS Board of Commissioners approved a racial equity policy to reduce racism and biases in schools, and passed a Black Lives Matter resolution. But Rodriguez said some of the sites that have become known as cornerstones of the Civil Rights Movement aren't talked about enough in students' history books.

"Particularly for African Americans, when they speak about these events, it's like one [or] two page[s] in a big history book of 500 pages," Rodriguez said. "And I think especially in IPS where most of the students are Black and Brown, we need to be more culturally responsive to teaching this to them, and teaching it to all kids."

Now some of the members from the trip — some of whom are former educators — want to speak to IPS'

- want to speak to IPS curriculum department to understand how the district can best adapt their experiences to support student learning. Rodriguez believes the experience will aid the district when selecting social studies textbooks and curriculum resources and hopes to take a group of IPS students to visit Alabama.

'Steel Magnolias': Laughter through sadness

By JAYDEN KENNETT jaydenk@indyrecorder.com

"Steel Magnolias" is a play about laughter and sadness, and most importantly laughter through that sadness. The play is set in a small parish in Louisiana called Chinquapin in a hair salon owned by Truvy Jones. The cast is relatively small, made up of only five people, but the impact it leaves on your heart is huge. "Steel Magnolias" will run at the Indiana Repertory Theatre through June 5.

Under the direction of Laura Gordon, the play manages to show themes of widowhood, health problems and a community in a light-hearted, but memorable way. The set of the play is Truvy's salon. A kitchenette adorns the left of the stage, hair drying seats in the middle, a sink on the right and of course the dressing chair sits center stage. The set brought a warm atmosphere to the play and made me feel like I was next in line to get my hair done.

The play is set over years' worth of Saturday morning hairdos where a group of women meet to exchange town secrets and recipes. The play starts with a new apprentice Annelle Dupuy DeSoto joining the shop on Shelby Eatenton Latcherie's wedding day. It's in the first few moments when the characters enter the shop that we get a taste of who they are as people. Annelle is shy and nervous on her first day, while Shelby is out-going, loves the color pink and is optimistic.

It's all fun and laughs until we get our first taste of tragedy when Shelby has a diabetic snappy, but polite way. We learn throughout the play that the men are lacking. Clairee Belcher is widowed, Annelle's husband is a criminal who has left her and Truvy's husband "hasn't left the couch in 15 years," or at least he did once long enough to build her a salon to support them. Through each detail we get another look into the character's life and mannerisms. Each character is profoundly unique enough that everyone should be able to see a little bit of themselves in each individual.

Dillon Silva, whose nephew was in a nearby classroom, said students were watching a movie when a bullet shattered a window. Moments later, their teacher saw the armed assailant walk past the door.

"Oh, my God, he has a gun!" the teacher shouted twice, according to Silva. "The teacher didn't even have time to lock the door," he said.

Investigators did not immediately disclose a motive but identified the assailant as Salvador Ramos, a resident of the community about 85 miles (135 kilometers) west of San Antonio.

Ramos had hinted on social media that an attack could be coming, suggesting that "kids should watch out," according to state Sen. Roland Gutierrez, who said he had been briefed by state police.

Ramos legally brought two AR-style rifles just days before the attack, soon after his 18th birthday, state senators briefed by law enforcement said.

One of the guns was purchased at a federally licensed dealer in the Uvalde area on May 17, according to Sen. John Whitmire. Ramos bought 375 rounds of ammunition the next day, then purchased the second rifle on May 20.

He also dropped a backpack containing several magazines God's name are we going to stand up to full of ammunition near the school entrance.

The attack in the heavily Latino town of Uvalde was the deadliest school shooting in the U.S. since a gunman killed 20 children and six adults at Sandy Hook Elementary in Newtown, Connecticut, in December 2012.

Families in Uvalde waited hours for word on their children. At the town civic center where some gathered Tuesday night, the silence was broken repeatedly wounded his grandmother, then fled

He drove to the scene after receiving a terrifying call from his daughter about the first reports of the shooting. Waiting, he said, was the heaviest moment of his life.

The attack was the latest in a seemingly unending string of mass killings at churches, schools, stores and other death in a racist rampage at a Buffalo, New York, supermarket.

In a somber address to the nation hours after the bloodshed in Uvalde, President Joe Biden pleaded for new gun restrictions.

In 2018, a gunman killed 10 people at Santa Fe High School in the Houston area. A year before that, a gunman shot more than two dozen people to death during a Sunday service in the small town of Sutherland Springs. COMMUTING Continued from A1

Thousands of Marion County residents without a vehicle rely on public transportation to get to work, and that also means they have to choose jobs based on that public transportation. Not all of them are "good jobs."

While Indianapolis public transportation is expanding, there are still many gaps, and it stops at the Marion County line. It does not extend throughout bordering counties — and that is where Central Indiana has its fastest growing number of "good jobs."

Good jobs

In the past, many of the region's middle-class jobs were in manufacturing. But increases in efficiency and globalization shifted Indiana's labor market away from traditional factory jobs to sectors like advanced manufacturing and health care. Now a majority of Central Indiana's "good," middleclass jobs require some sort of post-secondary degree.

A good job provides health care. It has opportunities to learn new skills and grow in your career. It is more than a living hourly wage — in Indiana it pays more than an estimated $40,000 a year.

Sarah Kalloch, executive director of the Good Jobs Institute, said without a good job, it is rare to be able to break the cycle of poverty.

"I think when people live in poverty, we often blame the person and not the system," Kalloch said.

People without good jobs often have to work multiple jobs, which is difficult to manage. And many studies show that financial instability contributes to mental and physical health problems.

"You're thinking about all the bills you can't pay and how you're going to make sure everyone has enough to eat and make sure you're not evicted. And that has a significant impact on your ability to focus," Kalloch said.

This is a growing problem in Indiana, where only around 40% of workers are in good jobs. That not only indicates they are in or near the cycle of poverty, it is also bad for the economy. And studies_ show that if more people aren't connected to good jobs, the problem is likely to get worse.

Central Indiana

In the last decade, there has been an increase in good jobs in and around Indianapolis. Many of these jobs are in advanced sectors, like health and technology.

The fastest growing sector of new good jobs are outside Marion County, not on the IndyGo bus lines, according to SAVI.

A lack of transportation to a good job is part of the cycle of poverty. If someone can't afford a car, it's difficult for them to get a stable job with benefits that provides the opportunity to accrue the wealth necessary to buy one. Even after that initial purchase, expenses continue with factors such as gas, insurance and maintenance.

Often that problem is compounded by education barriers. Of the number of new good jobs in and around Indianapolis, almost 75% of jobs in industries that pay well and provide benefits — and don't require a college degree — are in Indianapolis' suburban counties.

That makes them inaccessible to Marion County residents who don't have their own transportation.

What now?

Public transit outside of Marion County is sparse, and inside Marion County there are still obstacles for people who need to commute to work: bus lines don't go everywhere.

But there are active efforts to increase equitable access.

Officials with Indianapolis' public transportation agency, IndyGo, said recent transportation developments aim to bridge these gaps. For example, the Purple Line, a bus rapid transit route connecting Indianapolis and Lawrence, was planned to serve some of the city's most disinvested neighborhoods on the east side.

IndyGo also partnered with local nonprofit Pathway Resource Center on a new micro-transit initiative called Driven to Success. For $2, residents of the city's far east side can schedule a 15-seat bus to pick them up at their door and take them anywhere within a 10-mile radius.

City-County Councilor La Keisha Jackson (D-14) is a leader for the Driven to Success project. She says many residents need these initiatives to access quality employment and other essential resources.

"Where they're lacking food access they can go to grocery stores or food pantries," Jackson said. "They can go to their jobs, or if they need to go to an interview, or pick up job applications. Child care, health care, pharmacies, all those needs."

Jackson said project leaders made sure to include large employers within the boundaries, such as a Pepsi warehouse, an Amazon facility and Community East Hospital. She said she hopes this project will provide assistance to communities otherwise not getting their needs met through existing public transit.

IndyGo has previously proposed further expansions into Hamilton and Johnson counties, but they were denied. Director of Communications Carrie Black said right now there are no plans to expand into bordering counties.

Another day in the US, another mass shooting

By OSEYE BOYD

Sigh. I had to take a deep breath before writing this column because here we are again.

Another mass shooting. I'm still reeling from the shooting in Buffalo on May 14 where 10 people who were grocery shopping were killed. Ten people who went into the store with 1,000 things on their minds they needed to do, and 10 people who never made it home that evening.

Not even a full two weeks later, another mass shooting has occurred. This time an 18-year-old killed 19 children and two teachers at Robb Elementary School in Uvalde, Texas. The gunman also shot his grandmother before he left for the school.

Hurt. Anguish. Disgust. Anger. Fear. Confusion. Frustration. Those are a few of my feelings.

How are we here continuously and why is nothing done about it?

Twenty-six people, mostly first graders, were killed at Sandy Hook Elementary School, Newtown, Connecticut. That happened in 2012. Seventeen students and staff were killed in a mass shooting at Stoneman Douglas High School, Parkland, Florida, in 2018. In Texas, a state known to be gun friendly, 10 people were killed at Santa Fe High School in 2018; 23 at a Walmart in El Paso in 2019; and more than two dozen killed in Sutherland Springs in 2017. Oh, and the National Rifle Association annual convention begins May 27 in the great state of Texas. The gunman in this latest massacre recently turned 18. I guess as a birthday present to himself he legally purchased two AR-style rifles. He bought one on May 17; the other on May 20. He bought 375 rounds of ammunition on May 18. Where the heck are the red flags? Who needs two AR-style rifles within days of each other, and who needs 375 rounds of ammo?

Some politicians are already throwing this idea around that the best way to stop school shootings is to arm teachers. That just sounds so ridiculous. Are we arming teachers with AR-style rifles and enough ammo to take out a village? Are teachers supposed to come to work every day in tactical gear so they're always ready? The gunmen now are coming protected and ready. Who's paying for teachers to go to the range so they become expert marksmen and won't kill innocent bystanders in a Wild Wild West-style shootout? Where do teachers keep these guns? In plain sight of the children or hidden away? If in plain sight, what happens if a child plays with the gun and injures or kills someone? Is the teacher liable? The school? Parents are liable when they leave guns unattended. If the gun is hidden, will the teacher have time to get to it before the gunman shoots him or her?

Instead of having this ridiculous conversation about arming everyone, why don't we actually do something about guns? It's beyond time. Are we so callous and apathetic as Americans that we just move from one mass shooting to another only offering the cliched "thoughts and prayers" and having moments of silence? How about we demand some real action from our lawmakers.

As I've previously written, we're more worried about banning books than we are guns. There's something off about that to me. The push to ban abortions, books, critical race theory, sex education, etc. is under the guise of caring about children. Yet, we don't care enough about children to stop mass shootings. I recall adults calling children from Parkland, Florida, crisis actors. Sounds really caring to me. If you aren't demanding an end to school shootings, why are you demanding a ban on a book?

We also need to confront America's love of violence. This is a violent country. I'm not talking about movies or video games. I'm talking about real-life violence that has real-life consequences. We exalt violence in the name of freedom as necessary. We revel in violence and laugh at it. We accept violence as part of life. Violence sure seems to be a part of human nature, but is it human nature to revere it so?

I'm not anti-gun, but guns are not more important to me than human life. I do not want to live in a country where a shootout at the OK Corral can happen at any time. Our politicians need to get some nerve to stand up to gun lobbyists, and we need to force them to - or force them out of office.

By LARRY SMITH

Hypocrisy and logical inconsistency are two of the most common traits of being human. People espouse deeply held beliefs, religious or otherwise. However, we have contradictory value judgments. We pick and choose where, when, and how to apply our convictions. We equivocate. Importantly, we often fail to think critically about the implications of our beliefs.

As someone who generally opposes abortion, I am dismayed that too many people who profess to be "pro-life" don't support programs and public dollars for children who are born into difficult socioeconomic circumstances. It is hypocritical to lose concern for children after they have escaped the birth canal. (As I've written previously, we should distinguish between being "pro-life" as compared to merely being "pro-birth.") For the record, while I believe that abortion is morally wrong in most cases, I think that overturning Roe is a bad idea. That's a story for another day.

par with those of people. This is perhaps nowhere more evident than in the fact that there are animal activists who are seeking, quite literally, to grant human status to elephants. Or, more specifically, they want to have human status legally conferred on a particular elephant.

I raise this issue because I was stunned by recent news coverage of legal attempts to give human status to an elephant in the Bronx Zoo whose name is "Happy." A nonprofit organization called the Nonhuman Rights Project is representing Happy. They say that her innate intelligence and other qualities, including the ability to recognize herself as an individual in a mirror, should allow her to be classified as human. (The organization argues that Happy is "self-aware," which, presumably, could have ramifications for artificial intelligence.) Changing Happy's legal status could be done through a writ of habeas corpus - which heretofore has not applied to non-human animals. Of course, the legal machinations are pomorphize an elephant. The practical implications could be quite far reaching. If one elephant is given such status, wouldn't it be discriminatory not to confer such status on all elephants even if they aren't self-aware? Further, it is inevitable that apes and other animals would achieve the same status. And, if animals are human, killing them (including for consumption) would legally be murder. This would also mean that - in theory - animals could be forced to stand trial for committing crimes.

Other consequences could include the outlawing of scientific testing on animals (given that they can't exactly give their consent). Perhaps it would even mean that, say, two dolphins could get married. Would animals be able to own property, such as the land on which they hunt? Further, this could potentially open the door for other "life forms." For example, there are legal briefs arguing that trees should have certain rights. In fact, the founders also considered whether to allow animals to be counted for purposes of governmental representation. (The Congress ultimately rejected the notion.)

accepted today were fought for in the courts and in the public square over several decades. (Slavery and women's suffrage come immediately to mind.) Further, legal precedents actually mean something in American jurisprudence - though stare decisis is likely not to prevail in at least one Supreme Court case this summer.

To be fair, I understand that the question of conferring human status on animals is driven by two legitimate impulses: (1) the desire not to be cruel to sentient beings and (2) concern for our rapidly deteriorating environment. Regarding the latter, our rapacious destruction of natural habitats has real implications for humans - the homo sapien kind.

I think that such sentiments have merit. However, as an African American, this issue gives me some pause. Infamously, the U.S. Constitution declared that African Americans and Native Americans were less than fully human. And, as we see all too frequently today, too many violent white Americans still consider people of color to be less than human. Perhaps we should fix that issue first.

On a related note, I am also troubled by people who don't consider fetuses to be worthy of protection even as they consider the lives of animals to be on only a means to an end; the ultimate goal is to have Happy moved from the relatively small confines of the zoo to a much larger area.

Let's set aside the multiplicity of arcane legal and philosophical issues that are involved in trying to anthro-

Racist 'replacement' rhetoric is deadly and Republicans must stop using it

By BEN JEALOUS

(TriceEdneyWire.com) – The young man who murdered 10 people in Buffalo, New York, on May 14, was out to kill Black people. He chose a grocery store because he wanted to leave the local Black community in fear of going about their daily lives.

These evil actions were motivated by a racist ideology known as the Great Replacement Theory. That should cause some serious reflection among Republicans who are trying to build power with their own versions of racist "replacement" rhetoric.

Replacement rhetoric is meant to tap into a very old fear: that the survival and dominance of white Americans is threatened by others — whether by the freedom and empowerment of Black people or immigration by people of color. Frederick Douglass, one of the great Americans of all time, denounced that ideology shortly after the end of the Civil War. Douglass was born into slavery.

He became a great anti-slavery speaker and organizer. He gave a series of important anti-slavery speeches in Buffalo, near where he lived in Rochester, and where a statue of him in his hometown has been repeatedly vandalized. In 1869, this Black Republican gave a speech called "Our Composite Nation."

He promoted a vision of a country that welcomed and was strengthened by diversity. And he denounced fears that were being stirred up against Chinese immigrants. He said that the idea that "the Caucasian race may not be able to hold their own" against immigrants "does not seem entitled to much respect."

Truth.

Replacement ideology is still not worthy of respect. It is toxic. And it promotes violence.

The man arrested for the killings in Buffalo reportedly claimed that he picked up his anti-Semitic and racist beliefs from some of the unsavory corners of the internet. He decided to kill Black people in Buffalo. Others who were twisted by the same racist ideas chose to kill Latinos in El Paso, Jews in Pittsburgh, Muslims in Christchurch, New Zealand.

Unfortunately, millions of Americans are hearing variations of the replacement rhetoric from irresponsible politicians and cable TV personalities. They falsely claim that Democrats want "open borders" so they can replace American voters with what Tucker Carlson called "more obedient voters from the Third World."

Carlson has used that kind of rhetoric more than 400 times on his highly rated show. And this year at least half a dozen Republican Senate candidates have been running on the idea.

It seems that the Republican Party, the party of Abraham Lincoln, is acting more like the old Democratic Party did after the Civil War. It is becoming a party defined by its willingness to use the ideology of violent white supremacists to try to stir up voters and win elections.

This is playing with fire. And if it continues, we will all get burned, again and again.

There is a more honorable path for the Republican Party. I believe national Republicans should go to Buffalo. They should reflect on the killings that were motivated by racist ideas. They should reflect on the legacy of Frederick Douglass. And they should consider the life of a more recent Republican, the late Jack Kemp.

Kemp had been a quarterback for the Buffalo Bills. Then he became a Republican congressman representing western New York. And he ran for president as both a Republican and a card-carrying member of the NAACP. "I can't help but care about the rights of the people I used to shower with," Kemp said.

We urgently need more of our national leaders to embrace Douglass' broad vision of a strong and diverse America, and Jack Kemp's recognition of our shared humanity. And we need more people, both politicians and regular folks, to have the courage to consistently call out bigotry when we hear it and to hold accountable those who spread it.

ments in trails and greenways as a part of Circle City Forward Phase 3 and will include 7.25 miles of new greenways and 4 miles of on-street protected bicycle infrastructure.

The first major project begins with a 5-mile expansion of the B&O railway trail to complete a 16.65-mile corridor connecting Haughville, Hawthorne and Fairfax to Speedway and Brownsburg. It will also connect a Michigan Street bike lane to downtown and the east side. The trail is expected to be completed by the end of this year, according to CICF's website.

In the Martindale-Brightwood neighborhood, planning, design and construction are still underway, but improving pedestrian and bicycle safety along Dr. Andrew J. Brown Avenue is a priority, Kaufmann said. A new path of protected bike lane will be constructed between 30th and 16th streets, as well as an off-street trail from Dr. Andrew J. Brown Avenue to Boulevard Place.

Securing funding for new projects can be the hardest part, said Kaufmann. Now, with funds secured, the next step of the projects involves getting community input.

The Grassy Creek Trail will see 1.75 miles of new trail on the far east side and 38th Street will see traffic calming interventions such as speed bumps and narrowing streets between Cold Springs Road and Meridian Street.

Improving quality of life can sometimes leads to gentrification and displacement, Payne said. Because the projects stretch across different areas of the city, investors won't be interested in targeting individual areas to gentrify.

Along with improving trails and constructing new ones, the grant invests in several partnerships. Indiana Pacers Bikeshare will add new locations and subsidize bikeshare passes. Marion County Bike Map will provide maps of the new trials systems as well.

"We are no longer seeing our trail system as solely a recreational amenity, but part of the transportation system," Payne said. "We want people to be able to use it, to get exercise, to socialize, to be connected with their neighbors, but also get them to where they need to go."

78,000 pounds of infant formula arrives in US

By MICHAEL CONROY Associated Press

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — A military plane carrying enough specialty infant formula for more than half a million baby bottles arrived May 22 in Indianapolis, the first of several flights expected from Europe aimed at relieving a shortage that has sent parents scrambling to find enough to feed their children.

President Joe Biden authorized the use of Air Force planes for the effort, dubbed "Operation Fly Formula," because no commercial flights were available.

The formula weighed 78,000 pounds, White House press secretary Karine Jean-Pierre told reporters aboard Air Force One as Biden flew from South Korea to Japan.

Agriculture Secretary Tom Vilsack was in Indianapolis to greet the arrival of the first shipment.

The flights are intended to provide "some incremental relief in the coming days" as the government works on a more lasting response to the shortage, Brian Deese, director of the White House National Economic Council, said.

Deese told CNN's "State of the Union" that the flight brought 15% of the specialty medical grade formula needed in the U.S., and because of various actions by the government, people should see "more formula in stores starting as early as this week."

Longer term, he said, the U.S. needs more formula providers "so that no individual company has this much control over supply chains."

The White House announced the first two Defense Production Act authorizations for infant formula, both coming from the Department of Health and Human Services.

The manufacturer Abbott Nutrition can now receive priority orders of raw materials like sugar and corn syrup for infant formula, which the White House said will allow the manufacturer to increase production quickly by one-third. Reckitt, owner of Mead-Johnson, can now receive priority orders of consumables like filters and other single-use products necessary to generate certain oils needed to produce infant formula, the White House said, which will allow Reckitt facilities to operate at maximum capacity.

The Biden administration has struggled to address the nationwide shortage of formula, particularly hypoallergenic varieties. The crisis follows the closure of the nation's largest domestic manufacturing plant in Michigan in February due to safety issues.

The White House has said 132 pallets of Nestle Health Science Alfamino Infant and Alfamino Junior formula was to leave Ramstein Air Base in Germany for the U.S. Another 114 pallets of Gerber Good Start Extensive HA formula were expected to arrive in the coming days. Altogether, about 1.5 million 8-ounce bottles of the three formulas, which are hypoallergenic for children with cow's milk protein allergies, are expected to arrive this week.

Indianapolis was chosen because it is a Nestle distribution hub. The formula will be offloaded into FedEx semitractor-trailers and taken to a Nestle distribution center about a mile away where the company will do a standard quality control check before distributing the supplies to hospitals, pharmacies and doctor's offices, according to an administration official on site.

In a statement, the White House said a Pentagon-sourced FedEx Express flight of Nestlé S.A. formula from Ramstein Air Base would be bound for a Nestle facility in Pennsylvania.

Nestle said that over the past few months it has worked "around the clock" to address the formula shortage and help meet demand.

"We have significantly increased the amount of our formulas available to consumers by ramping up production and accelerating general product availability to retailers and online, as well as through hospitals and home health care for those most vulnerable," the company said in a release.

"At Nestle we are absolutely committed to doing everything we can to get parents and caregivers the formula they need so their children can thrive," it added. "We prioritized these products because they serve a critical medical purpose as they are for children with cow's milk protein allergies."

Under "Operation Fly Formula," the Department of Agriculture and the Department of Health and Human Services are authorized to request Department of Defense support to pick up overseas infant formula that meets U.S. health and safety standards, so it can get to store shelves faster, according to the USDA.

Alfamino is primarily available through hospitals and home health care companies that serve patients at home.

U.S. regulators and Abbott Nutrition hope to have its Michigan plant reopened next week, but it will take about two months before product is ready for delivery. The Food and Drug Administration eased importation requirements for baby formula to try to ease the supply crunch, which has left store shelves void of some brands and some retailers rationing supply for parents nervous about feeding their children.

Stay Safe in the Sun Spending time outside is a great way to be physically active, reduce stress, and get Vitamin D. The Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC) and the Marion County Public Health Department want everyone to stay safe and reduce the risk of getting skin cancer while working and playing outside. Skin cancer is the most common cancer in the U.S. Most skin cancers are caused by too much exposure to ultraviolet (UV) light. UV rays are an invisible kind of radiation that comes from the sun, tanning beds, and sunlamps that can damage skin cells. Protection from UV rays is important all year, not just during the summer. UV rays can reflect off surfaces like water, cement, sand, and snow. A good way to lower the risk of sun damage and skin cancer is by seeking shade under an umbrella, tree or other shelter. When possible, wear long-sleeved shirts and long pants and skirts, which can provide protection from UV rays. If wearing this type of clothing isn't practical, try to wear a T-shirt or a beach cover-up. Clothes made from tightly woven fabric offer the best protection. A dry T-shirt offers better protection than a wet one, and darker colors may offer more protection than lighter colors. Some clothing is certified under international standards as offering UV protection. For the most protection, wear a hat that has a brim all the way around that shades your face, ears, and the back of your neck. A tightly woven fabric, such as canvas, works best to protect your skin from UV rays. Avoid straw hats with holes that let sunlight through. A darker hat may offer more UV protection. When wearing a baseball cap, protect the ears and the back of the neck by wearing clothing that covers those areas, using sunscreen, or staying in the shade. Sunglasses protect the eyes from UV rays and reduce the risk of cataracts. They also protect the tender skin around your eyes. Sunglasses that block both UVA and UVB rays offer the best protection. Most sunglasses sold in the U.S. meet this standard. For sunscreen, use one with a broad spectrum that blocks both UVA and UVB rays and has an SPF of 15 or higher. Apply a thick layer on all exposed skin and get help for hard-toreach places. Sunscreen is not recommended for babies ages 6 months old or younger. The U.S. Food and Drug Administration recommends keeping infants out of the sun during midday and using protective clothing if they must be in the sun. "These simple steps can allow us to enjoy the outdoors while protecting our skin from the potential dangers of the sun's UV rays," said Virginia A. Caine, M.D., director and chief medical officer of the Marion County Public Health Department. "Using sunscreen is so important. Be sure to reapply sunscreen after two hours in the sun and after swimming, sweating or toweling off." Providing sun protection for outdoor workers helps create a healthy and safe workplace, and increase productivity. Recommendations include creating work schedules that minimize sun exposure. For example, schedule outdoor tasks like mowing for early morning instead of noon and rotate workers to reduce UV exposure. For more information on sun safety, please visit CDC.gov.

Religious backers of abortion rights say God's on their side

By CLAIRE GALOFARO AP National Writer

TUSCALOOSA, Ala. (AP) - It was lunch hour at the abortion clinic, so the nurse in the recovery room got her Bible out of her bag in the closet and began to read.

"Trust in the Lord with all your heart, and lean not on your own understanding," her favorite proverb says, and she returns to it again and again. "He will make your paths straight."

She believes God led her here, to a job at the West Alabama Women's Center, tending to patients who've just had abortions. "I trust in God," said Ramona, who asked that her last name not be used because of the volatility of America's abortion debate.

Out in the parking lot, protesters bellowed at patients arriving for appointments, doing battle against what they regard as a grave sin.

The loudest voices in the abortion debate are often characterized along a starkly religious divide, the faithful versus not. But the reality is much more nuanced, both at this abortion clinic and in the nation that surrounds it. The clinic's staff of 11 - most of them Black, deeply faithful Christian women have no trouble at all reconciling their work with their religion.

And as the U.S. Supreme Court appears poised to dismantle the constitutional right to an abortion, they draw on their faith that they will somehow continue.

God is on our side, they tell each other. God will keep this clinic open.

Robin Marty, who moved from Minneapolis to Tuscaloosa a couple years ago to help run this clinic, was surprised to hear nurses pray for guidance as the future of abortion grows uncertain.

"That is one of the things that has caused a whiplash for me - I had this stereotype in my head of a Southern religious person," said Marty. "I just assumed that there was no compatibility between people who are religious and people who support the ability to get an abortion."

Marty realized she was wrong. It's a common error.

"We need to have a real conversation bout what we describe as Christianity," said Kendra Cotton, a member of the Black Southern Women's Collective, a network of Black women organizers, many of them from faith-based groups. The white evangelical worldview that abortion is murder has consumed the conversation, flattening the understanding of how religion and views on abortion truly intersect, she said.

should be legal in most or all cases, according to the Public Religion Research Institute. White evangelicals are the other extreme, with only 24% believing abortion should be allowed in most or all cases.

For faithful women of color, there's often a very different balancing act of values when confronting the question of whether women should be able to end unwanted pregnancies, Cotton said.

"We know that Christianity supports freedom, and inherent in freedom is bodily autonomy. Inherent in Christianity is free will. When people talk about the body being a temple of God, you have purview over your body, there is nothing more sacred," Cotton said.

The idea of the state restricting what a person can do with their own body is in direct conflict with that, she said, and it is reminiscent of being under someone else's control – of slavery.

"You don't get to tell me what to do," Cotton said.

In Tuscaloosa, the West Alabama Women's Center sits on the edge of a nondescript medical plaza, a half-mile from the University of Alabama campus. Though many of the center's clientele are college students, others come from all over the state and some surrounding ones — it is the only abortion clinic for two hours in every direction. Many of their clients are Black, many already have children, and more than 75% survive below the poverty line.

always says, "I understand."

"I mean that, I do understand, I've gone through that myself," she said.

Ramona, 39, is a single mother of four children, and had her first child at 16. She sometimes imagines what her life might have been had she started her family later. She had to drop out of college. There were times, when her children were young, when she couldn't pay the gas bill, and she boiled water so they could have warm baths.

"Women go through so much, it's hard," she said. "So you should have that choice, whether or not you're ready to be a mother. No one else should choose for you."

Her daughter used to say "Mom, I want to be just like you," and she would stop her. "No ma'am," she'd say to her. "I want you to be better." Her daughter is now 22 and studying to be a doctor.

She clawed herself out of poverty and built a life she loves. Her co-worker at the front desk calls her Miss Wonderful - she's at peace with God, she said, so every day is a great one.

For a time, she tried to be friendly with one of the regulars who protested outside, trying to convince patients that won't overturn Roe v. Wade, because abortion is murder and they shouldn't go in. She'd visit on her breaks or as she bear the burden of abortion bans. was leaving for the day. They discussed Scripture, forgiveness, sin.

If people heard the stories she had inside this clinic, she can't imagine trying to mandate that people be forced into motherhood. She had a patient once who had cancer, wanted the child but couldn't continue chemotherapy while she was pregnant. She had to choose between her own life and the child she wanted.

Just two weeks before, Horton wept when she met a 13-year-old who'd been raped, and she can't shake the look on the child's face, staring blankly in the exam room.

"It's going to be OK. Don't think you did anything wrong because you didn't," Horton told her.

She often hears patients cry that they're going to go to hell.

"I've had patients against abortion until it happened to their child, or it happened to them," she said. "The first thing they say, 'I don't believe in this.' And I say, 'Let's get past that. Now that you're pregnant, what are you doing to do? Are you still not going to believe in this? Now you're on the other side. Where you were judging, now it's you."

They pray that the Supreme Court they know their poorest patients will

Before Roe v. Wade, faith leaders in many places led efforts to help pregnant women access underground abortions, because they considered it a calling to show compassion and mercy to the most vulnerable.

Now, Black Protestants have some of the most liberal views on access to abortion: Nearly 70% believe abortion

Every patient comes into Ramona's recovery room after their abortion. She keeps the lights low. Working here, to her, feels like a righteous calling. She believes the Christian way is to love people where they are, and that means walking kindly with them as they make the best decision for themselves.

Sometimes they cry, and tell her they didn't want to be there. She's heard stories of rape and domestic violence, but most talk about fear of having more mouths they can't afford to feed. She She'd say, "I can see where you're coming from. Can you see where I'm coming from? I'm not going to love you any less because of what you believe in or what you think."

Then one day she was walking by and he shouted at her: When you die, you know where you'll be going, and it isn't heaven. She doesn't talk to him anymore.

Alesia Horton, the clinic's director, eved the protesters from the window.

"I don't know what Bible they're reading, 'cause it's not the one that I read," she said. She and Ramona have been friends since childhood and share a Christian faith.

Wealthy women will always find a way. They can travel to states where abortion is legal and all the headaches that entails: time off work, babysitters, a tank full of gas, hotel rooms.

If Roe falls, abortion would be barred in Alabama in almost every instance. A 2019 state law, put on hold by the courts for now, outlaws the procedure in all but emergency cases. This clinic is going to try to stay open for those left behind. It is expanding into a fullservice gynecological office that people can turn to if they self-administer an abortion and require medical attention, without fear that someone will report them to the police.

In the meantime, the ideological gulf between the believers inside and out-

SPIRITUAL OUTLOOK Your secret story

BY MARION J. MILLER

"When you fast, do not look somber as the hypocrites do, for they disfigure their faces to show others they are fasting. Truly I tell you, they have received their reward in full. But when you fast, put oil on your head and wash your face, so that it will not be obvious to others that you are fasting, but only to your Father, who is unseen; and your Father, who sees what is done in secret, will reward you. Matthew 6:16-18

There is a funny thing about change — if nothing changes, nothing changes. We were created to change - change the world. No act is too small to create change.

But how, how can we change the world, when the world keeps changing on us? We go to bed on top of the world, and we wake up the world is on top of us. Gas prices are skyrocketing, interest rates on the rise, and food and baby formula are vacant from the shelves. How are we to survive in this changing world?

First of all, it is not about us! Life is not about money, titles or fame! It is about Jesus! His dynamic teachings create the change in our personal lives, because in every one of us there is a secret life known only to God.

This is why is it so important to connect with God in secret. If we do, then the results of our good works will occur "openly" to the world. It is not about going through all of the religious things and completely missing the point.

We can attend church, pray, give, fast and serve and completely miss the mark. It's not that these things are wrong! But these are things that should not be done to win public recognition of one's personal religious practices.

In Matthew's Gospel, Jesus found public recognition to be offensive! He called it hypocrisy! He said that those who made a public showing would receive a very limited reward. The reward they hoped for was to please God, but it was denied! Jesus did not condemn the practices of prayer, giving and fasting, but he did disapprove of their practices — as a public show.

The best ways to take action are to give, pray and fast in secret with God. When you pray, don't be like the hypocrites. Go into your room and shut the door. And when you fast, do not look like the hypocrites, with a disfigured face. But when you fast, anoint your head and wash your face. And your father who sees "in secret" will reward you.

"Only what you do for Christ will last. Only what you do for Him, will be counted in the end." And remember, this King of Glory knows: "Your secret life."

Buffalo shooting victim laid to rest; city marks 1 week

By AARON MORRISON Associated Press

BUFFALO, N.Y. (AP) – Roberta Drury, a 32-year-old woman who was the youngest of the 10 Black people killed at a Buffalo supermarket, was remembered at her funeral May 21 for "that smile that could light up a room," as the city marked one week since the shooting with sorrowful moments of silence.

"Robbie," as she was called, grew up in the Syracuse area and moved to Buffalo a decade ago to help tend to her brother in his fight against leukemia. She was shot to death May 14 on a trip to buy groceries at the Tops Friendly Market targeted by the white gunman.

"There are no words to fully express the depth and breadth of this tragedy," Friar Nicholas Spano, parochial vicar of Assumption Church, said during the funeral service in Syracuse, not far from where Drury grew up in Cicero.

"Last Saturday, May 14, our corner of the world was changed forever," he said. "Lives ended. Dreams shattered and our state was plunged into mourning."

Drury's family wrote in her obituary that she "couldn't walk a few steps without meeting a new friend.'

"Robbie always made a big deal about someone when she saw them, always making sure they felt noticed and loved," her sister, Amanda, told The Associated Press by text before the service. After the funeral, at the Tops store in Buffalo, the mood was a mixture of tension and somber reflection as the city marked one week since the racist massacre.

At exactly 2:30 p.m., the moment the gunman opened fire, people who gathered and placed flowers near the corner where the victims have been memorialized observed a moment of silence. A dozen workers stood in a line outside of the Tops store entrance. Nearby, some mourners wept.

At the same time, Buffalo Mayor Byron Brown and other elected officials, along with Tops President John Persons, bowed their heads on the steps of City Hall for 123 seconds to mark the spar of the attack. Houses of worship of silence.

Jacob Blake Sr., the father of Jacob Blake Jr., a Black man paralyzed after being shot several times by police in Kenosha, Wisconsin, in 2020, said he flew into town from the Chicago area to offer support to the victims' families. When his son was shot, Blake said, he needed a true outpouring of support.

"What I needed was somebody just holding my hand," he said. "I just want the families to know that we're here to give them what they need."

As Drury was laid to rest, Spano said mourners would remember her "kindness ... love for family and friends, her perseverance, her tenacity, and most of all, that smile that could light up a room."

She was the second shooting victim to be eulogized.

A private service was held May 20 for Heyward Patterson, the beloved deacon at a church near the supermarket. More funerals were scheduled throughout the coming week.

Back at the memorial, Kellick, who is white, said the shooter's motivations and the reality of systemic racism in the country prompted a moment of personal reflection. "I have to learn a lot of things," he said. "I really need to look at my beliefs. I have a daughter at home. I need to be able to focus on teaching her how to love and care for people, no matter their sex, age, gender, race, sexual orientation." Cher Desi, a niece of 86-year-old victim Ruth Whitfield, said she would use her own grief to push for change across the nation. "I don't want anyone leaving here and judging people on their race, on their religion, or where they come from," said Desi, who now lives in Orlando, Florida, but often returned to Buffalo to visit the aunt who raised her. "How many people have to be devastated? The senseless killing has to stop."

side remains wide.

Some of the protesters outside stand quietly, holding signs and hoping their silent presence rattles patients enough to head back to their cars and go home. Some shout at patients as they walk through the parking lot into the clinic, trying to hand them leaflets or direct them to the anti-abortion crisis pregnancy center next door. Some say they want abortion barred completely, with no exceptions even for rape or life-threatening complications, because they believe abortion is murder no matter the circumstances. Most would not give their names; the pregnancy center declined an interview.

The protesters are sometimes aggressive: They have screamed into the clinic's back doors, recorded biohazard bins being carted away, called police if a patient lashes out when they tell them they're going to hell.

The clinic locks the doors for security reasons during the lunch hour between morning and afternoon appointments. On a recent day, as Ramona read her Bible in the back room, a 23-year-old woman arrived and couldn't get inside.

A group of protesters beckoned the woman, who did not want to be named. She was confused perhaps these people worked for the clinic. "We can help you," they told her.

"I just walked over there and had a million things thrown in my face," the woman said. "I'm a baby killer, I'm a murderer."

She ran away weeping. The clinic staff heard and sought her out.

"I'm so sorry," Horton said. She glared at the protesters from the window.

"God isn't theirs," she said, "God is all of ours."

Blacks in Virginia Beach are closing the wealth gap

By Stacy M. Brown NNPA Newswire Senior National Correspondent

Virginia Beach landed on the top spot of cities where African Americans fare best economically and where Black businesses thrive.

According to the personal finance website Smart Asset, Virginia Beach also has the seventh-highest median Black household income, at roughly $65,600, and the sixth-highest Black labor force participation rate, at 78.7%.

The statistics reflect 2019, the most recent data available.

Grand Prairie, Texas; Aurora, Illinois; Pembroke Pines, Florida; and Miramar, Florida, comprised the other cities in the top 5.

Charlotte, North Carolina; Garland, Texas; Durham, North Carolina; Enterprise, Nevada, and Elk Grove, CaliforiStockphoto / NNPA nia, rounded out the top 10.

The report noted the struggles of African Americans in homeownership and the overall wealth gap.

"Census data from 2019 shows that the median Black household income is 33% lower than the overall median household income.

Stephanie Horan wrote for Smart Asset that "the Black homeownership rate is 22 percentage points lower than the general homeownership rate."

She noted the Federal Reserve's 2019 Survey of Consumer Finances data on wealth accumulation, depicting even starker disparities.

That data places Black families' net worth at 87% lower than white families and 33% lower than Hispanic families.

For Virginia Beach, Census Bureau data revealed that the 2019 poverty rate for Black residents stood at 10%, the fourth lowest in Smart Asset's study.

More than 5% of businesses are Black owned in the Virginia Beach-Norfolk-Newport News metro area, the seventh-highest percentage overall for that metric.

Smart Asset officials reported that preliminary 2020 estimates show that Black Americans have been disproportionately affected by the health impacts of COVID-19 and its corresponding economic effects.

The authors wrote: "The regional economic effects of COVID-19 on Black Americans are difficult to determine due to insufficient localized data, but the available national data paints a grim picture: Bureau of Labor Statistics (BLS) data shows that as of December 2020, the Black unemployment rate was 3.9 and 3.2 percentage points higher than the white and overall unemployment rates, respectively."

The Black labor force participation rate was about 2.0 percentage points lower than both white and overall participation rates.

Horan offered three financial tips for African Americans, including checking if homeownership made sense, opening a retirement account and considering a financial advisor.

"A financial advisor can help you make smarter financial decisions to control your money better," Horan wrote. "SmartAsset's free tool matches you with financial advisors in your area in five minutes."

Biden Harris administration secures deal to increase access to affordable high-speed internet

By Stacy M. Brown NNPA Newswire Senior National Correspondent

The White House has announced a plan to expand access to affordable high-speed internet access for millions of Americans, particularly low-income families.

Officials said the plan counts as part of the Biden-Harris administration's Affordable Connectivity Program (ACP), created under the historic bipartisan infrastructure bill.

Administration officials said 20 internet service providers, including AT&T, Verizon, and Comcast, have agreed to either lower costs or increase speeds to provide eligible households with access to broadband internet with speeds of at least 100 megabits per second.

They would do so at a cost of no more than $30 per month.

The move should help households of color where officials provided statistics that show Latino Americans are 15% less likely to have high-speed internet than their white peers, while Black families are 9% less likely.

Additionally, about 35% of all people living on

Tribal lands lack access to broadband services. The administration estimated that 48 million households qualify for the ACP, which accounts for about 40% of all households in the U.S. Qualifying households either earn below 200% of the Federal Poverty Level or have a member who receives other government benefits such as SNAP, Medicaid or Supplemental Security Income.

"High-speed internet service is no longer a luxury — it's a necessity," administration officials wrote in a Fact Sheet.

"But too many families go without high-speed internet because of the cost or have to cut back on other essentials to make their monthly internet service payments. Lowering prices — including the cost of high-speed internet service — is President Biden's top priority."

As part of the Bipartisan Infrastructure Law, the president and vice president worked with Democrats and Republicans to create the ACP.

"The Biden-Harris Administration is grateful for the efforts of these companies and encourages additional internet service providers to join this effort to close the digital divide by offering high-speed, lowcost plans," officials stated.

Stellantis, Samsung plan Indiana electric car battery plant by 2030. Stellantis in October announced

KOKOMO, Ind. (AP) - A joint venture between Stellantis and Samsung plans to build an electric vehicle battery factory in Indiana that will employ up to 1,400 workers and become the company's second such factory in North America.

The venture announced May 24 plans to spend more than $2.5 billion on the plant in Kokomo that will supply electric battery modules for a range of vehicles produced at Stellantis' North American assembly plants.

Construction of the plant is expected to start later this year, with the facility expected to open in early 2025 in the city about 60 miles (97 kilometers) north of Indianapolis.

The venture's investment in the plant could gradually increase up to $3.1 billion, Mark Stewart, the chief operating officer of Stellantis North America, said at the announcement at Ivy Tech Community College in Kokomo.

Samsung SDI will use its PRiMX technology to produce electric vehicle battery cells and modules for the North American market at the Kokomo plant, the companies said in a statement.

Stellantis, formed last year with the merger of Fiat Chrysler and France's PSA Peugeot, had said it would build two electric vehicle battery factories in North America. The Kokomo plant would be the second of those plants and the first in the United States. In March, it announced plans to spend $4.1 billion in a joint venture with LG Energy Solution of Korea to build one of the plants in Windsor, Ontario. That plant will employ about 2,500 people.

Stellantis, the world's fourth-largest automaker, has announced plans to sell 5 million electric vehicles by 2030, with 50% of its North American passenger car and light truck sales going fully electric by 2030. Stellantis plans to sell only electric passenger cars in Europe plans to spend nearly $230 million to retool three Kokomo-area factories so they can produce transmission systems that work with both traditional gasoline-powered vehicles and gas-electric hybrid versions.

In 2020 it announced spending of $400 million to convert its Indiana Transmission Plant II in Kokomo into an engine factory.

"Today's announcement is another step toward positioning Indiana as a leader in the future of mobility, battery technology and clean energy," Indiana Gov. Eric Holcomb said in a statement. Indiana is offering the planned electric battery factory an incentive package of up to about $186.5 million in conditional tax credits, training grants and investments, including funding that would offset the costs of the plant's infrastructure, the Indiana Economic Development Corporation said.

'HIS NAME IS GEORGE FLOYD: One Man's Life and the Struggle for Racial Justice'

BY TERRI SCHLICHENMEYER

The pavement was hard. At that time of day, it still held the last of the sun's warmth but that didn't make it comfortable. Pebbles embedded in blacktop can bloody skin in a minute; bits of broken glass can scratch a cheek lying on the concrete. Streetside is never a good place to be, and in the new book, "His Name is George Floyd" by Robert Samuels and Toluse Olorunnipa, it gets worse.

Everyone who knew George Floyd knew that he loved them. He said so, in texts and in person, every time he saw them. That's the kind of man he was.

Born in North Carolina in 1973, Floyd was a joyous child surrounded by female relatives who doted on him and missed him badly when his mother took her children and followed a man to Houston. There, the family lived in a neighborhood that was mostly Black and all poor, and Floyd gained two younger halfbrothers.

The authors say that Floyd wasn't the best student at Jack Yates Senior High School in Houston, but he wasn't the worst. Teachers and students liked him; coaches liked him because he could really play basketball and football. He was gentle; they had to notch up his fierceness in both games but since he was more than 6' tall and a couple hundred pounds, there was promise. Which was just enough. Much to his heartbreak, Floyd couldn't pass the TAAS test given to assess the proficiency of all high school seniors in Texas. No pass, no diploma, but though he wasn't able to attend his graduation ceremony, he did land a basketball scholarship to South Florida Community College. Alas, bad grades followed him there and he soon returned to Houston, frustrated and broke, and he began selling drugs.

That didn't go well, either: Floyd was arrested, convicted and sent to prison.

More than four years later, with a felony on his record, Floyd decided to move to Minneapolis. It was a chance for a fresh start ...

While it may seem that "His Name is George Floyd" might be too painful to read, even now, two years after his death, that's not so. Not entirely.

There are huge pockets of sunny joy in this book, at a childhood enjoyed, dreams reached for, and people beloved. Those sides of Floyd, parts that were missed by many news outlets, are shared but authors Samuels and Olorunnipa don't let him become larger than life; Floyd had flaws, and we're allowed to see them.

Then again, there are times when George Floyd becomes almost a sidenote here.

That's when Samuels and Olorunnipa turn away to focus on what else happened that boiling-hot summer of 2020, including the BLM protests, politics and other incidences of police overreach; we also get a good overview of Derek Chauvin, his background and his trial.

Readers who want to somehow memorialize Floyd will appreciate this book for its candor, good research and its storytelling. You'll also want "His Name is George Floyd" for its concrete answers. States hands off when it comes to NCAA, athlete compensation

By JIM VERTUNO AP Sports Writer

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — The NCAA waited nearly a year to issue a warning that there are still rules to follow now that college athletes can earn money off their fame, sparking speculation that a crackdown could be coming for schools and boosters that break them.

But the NCAA isn't the only enforcement organization that stayed quiet as millions of dollars started flying around college athletes.

Nearly half the states, 24 in all, have laws regarding athlete compensation, all passed since 2019. Several specifically ban the sort of pay-for-play and recruiting enticement deals the NCAA still outlaws and critics of the new system worry about.

Yet those states have shown no appetite to question or investigate the schools, the contracts or the thirdparty groups orchestrating them. Even if they did, there is little legal framework for how they would do it.

Texas and Florida, two states with major college football and basketball programs, ban pay-for-play contracts and using deals to lure recruits to campus. But neither state set up mechanisms to investigate or punish a school, organization or agent caught breaking the rules.

"A lot of people are referencing the NCAA not taking action, but the same can be said about states," said Darren Heitner, an attorney who helped craft the Florida law.

The unenforced state bans on pay-for-play and recruiting deals calmed lawmakers who worried that college sports they love were changing, said Heitner, an advocate for athletes' rights to earn money. But there has been no indication a state attorney general or local prosecutor will go after a big university, coach and wealthy donors if the team is bringing in top players and winning.

Alabama was one state that did have specific punishment in its law: Anyone providing compensation to an athlete that caused them to lose eligibility faced a potential Class C felony, which carried up to 10 years in prison.

But Alabama lawmakers repealed the state's entire college athlete compensation law earlier this year. The law's original author called for the repeal because many contracts for NCAA enforcement to look at he worried it left Alabama schools at a recruiting disadvantage compared with rival schools in other states that didn't have similar restrictions.

Arkansas gives some legal power to the athletes in that state. They can sue their agent or another third party that offers or sets up a deal later deemed improper and they are declared ineligible to play.

Half the states don't have athlete compensation laws. Schools there have been left to navigate the general parameters the NCAA provided in June 2021 on the eve of the NIL era and to wait to see what would be enforced. Pay-for-play and "improper inducements" were still off the table, the NCAA said then, but there were few details and NIL deals were struck by the hundreds in the weeks that followed.

The NCAA finally stepped back into its enforcement role with new guidance that sought to clarify the types of contracts and booster involvement that should be considered improper.

Few expect a massive crackdown and the Division I Board of Governors noted that its focus was on the future. There's simply too many athletes and too them all.

"The enforcement is going to fall on the NCAA, (but) there's no way they'll try to look at thousands of deals," said Mit Winter, a sports law attorney in Kansas City, Missouri.

The NCAA will more likely look at some of the highly publicized deals set up through prominent business owners and third-party collectives that have popped up around dozens of schools to pool millions of dollars and connect athletes with business deals.

"It's positioned itself where it has no choice but to try to make an example out of a booster or a collective," Heitner said. "Otherwise, what was the point? ... If it doesn't, it's powerless and obsolete. It still has that problem that it knows it is going to be sued." NCAA officials did not immediately respond to requests for comment.

At Texas, the nonprofit Horns With Heart raised eyebrows when it announced just before the December football national signing day that it would offer all Longhorns scholarship offensive linemen $50,000 NIL deals to support charities. A few days later, Texas signed one of the top recruiting classes in the country with a bumper crop of blue-chip offensive linemen.

Horns With Heart co-founder Rob Blair was unconcerned by the warning from the NCAA, saying the nonprofit has played by the rules since it launched.

"We realized at the beginning of the NIL era that this Wild West attitude would eventually lead us to a moment like this, that is why we set out to be different," Blair said in an email. "We have gone above and beyond to ensure we not only follow the letter of the law of NIL regulation, but we feel we also represent the spirit of the NIL laws as they were originally written."

Aside from NCAA enforcement staff, university compliance directors - long the watchdogs over athletes and their eligibility - are trying to navigate a shifting landscape with murky rules.

Lyla Clerry, Iowa's senior associate athletics director for compliance, welcomed the NCAA's renewed guidance on athlete endorsement contracts if it means they will be enforced.

"Honestly, I don't know that I have a lot of faith that I'm going to see that happening," Clerry said, noting the last year has been "frustrating" for compliance officials.

"You don't really know, well, what should we be enforcing, because what is the NCAA going to enforce? So we can't constantly be beating our heads trying to enforce things that nationally aren't getting enforced," Clerry said. "I don't know if I would say it's operating blindly, but we're definitely in the dark."
