Former President Donald Trump is now criminal defendant Donald Trump.

For at least several moments on Tuesday, April 4, Trump was placed under arrest.

His Miranda rights read, and fingerprints taken, but authorities spared him a mugshot and customary perp walk.

Still, as he headed to the 15th floor courtroom at 100 Centre Street downtown, Trump joined the nearly 8,000 other non-violent felony defendants who have been arraigned in Manhattan so far in 2023.

Indiana governor signs ban on gender-affirming care

By ARLEIGH RODGERS
Associated Press/Report for America

Indiana's governor signed a bill banning all gender-affirming care for minors Wednesday, joining at least 12 other states that have enacted laws restricting or banning such care.

Republican Gov. Eric Holcomb signed the legislation after Republican majorities in the Legislature approved it. The law will go into effect July 1, and trans youth currently taking medication to transition would have until the end of the year to stop doing so.

Holcomb had told reporters Tuesday that the bill on his desk was vague and had not indicated he would sign it or veto it.

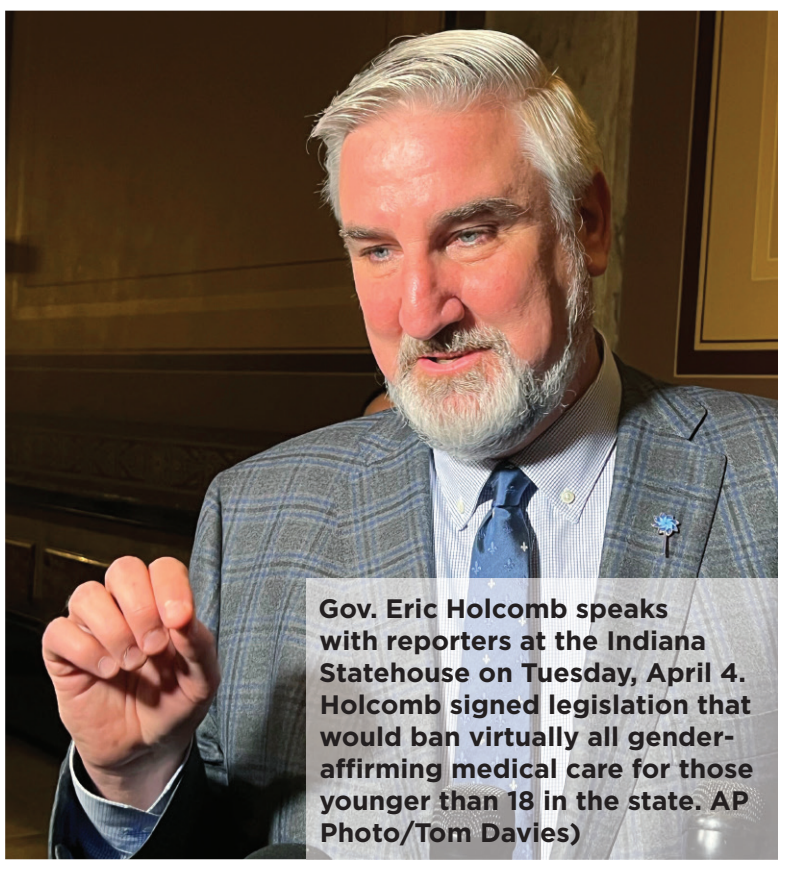

Opponents of the legislation said the types of care the bill would ban, such as hormone therapy and puberty blockers, are vital and often life-saving for transgender kids. Medical providers say most of the procedures banned in the bill are reversible and safe for minors. Transgender medical treatments for children and teens have been available in the U.S. for more than a decade and are endorsed by major medical associations.

But supporters of the legislation have contended such care is not reversible or carries side effects that only an adult — and not a minor's parent — can consent to.

Lawmakers also banned gender-transition surgeries for minors in the state, though hospital representatives in Indiana told lawmakers doctors do not perform genital surgeries for minors or provide them surgery referrals.

At least 12 states have enacted laws restricting or banning gender-affirming care for minors: Alabama, Arkansas, Arizona, Georgia, Idaho, Iowa, Kentucky, Mississippi, Tennessee, Utah, South Dakota and West Virginia. Federal judges have blocked enforcement of laws in Alabama and Arkansas, and nearly two dozen states are considering bills this year to restrict or ban care.

House Bill could automatically enroll eligible students into 21st Century Scholars program

By Jade Jackson
jadej@indyrecorder.com

House Bill 1449 is currently making its rounds in the Indiana Statehouse. The bipartisan Bill would automatically enroll eligible students into the 21st Century Scholars program.

The program helps aid students financially with higher education through paying up to 100% of tuition for public colleges and part of the tuition for private and independent colleges in the state.

The Bill was authored by Democratic Rep. Earl Harris Jr. and targets lower-income students.

"I'm a strong proponent of young people continuing their education post high school. Doesn't matter if it's a certificate, two-year degree, or a four-year bachelor's degree. I advise people to get something because it will help you in terms of career advancement down the line," said Harris.

Last year he spoke to the newly appointed commissioner for the Indiana Commission for Higher Education (CHE), Chris Lowery about the initial idea of automatic enrollment.

Both men have backgrounds in education and discussed the 21st Century Scholars program.

"I started in the role about 11 months ago, not quite a year. And in June, we published the annual readiness report. When I saw what the numbers were with steep declines in the college going rate, it really alarmed me," said Commissioner Lowery.

He said it wasn't just because of the pandemic either.

Numbers have been on the decline over the past decade.

Only 48% of students who were eligible enrolled according to their latest readiness report.

Over 80% of 21st Century Scholars go to college.

Only 30% of their peers who did not join the program were eligible to go to college.

21st Century Scholars complete college 10% higher than their low-income peers.

Enrollment eligibility starts for grades 7 and 8 for Indiana public schools and accredited nonpublic schools.

"So, I'm in a new role. I started asking new questions. If we could identify those kids by some means, why wouldn't we just automatically enroll them? Legislators said they wanted to help with that. The governor said he'd get behind that," said Lowery.

CHE set out to reverse the trend.

According to the bill, in cooperation with the Indiana Department of Education, CHE would identify students across the state who qualify for the program. They would then notify parents, guardians, or emancipated student minors of eligibility.

Students can also opt out of the program at any time.

"People will come to us and say 'Hey, my kid's going to college. They're in high school. Do you have any suggestions on how they can pay for college?' One of things I always ask is if they're a 21st Century Scholar and almost 100% of the time the parent looks at me and goes, 'What's that?'" said Harris.

He said eligible students fall through the cracks because they don't even know the program exists and they're missing out on something that would help pay for college.

Regardless of automatic enrollment, Harris said informing families is still a vital part of the program's success.

Indiana's 21st Century Scholars program has been around since 1990.

CHE was at the state fair last year with their 21st Century Scholars booth. Commissioner Lowery said so many Hoosiers walked by saying how they were grateful for the program growing up.

"One man almost had tears when he said how was a 21st Century Scholar. He was the first person in his family to go to college. He's an engineer now, and he pointed to his kids and said they're going to go to college because of this too," said Lowery.

A part of their outreach is through community and faith-based organization along with schools to help instill the value of higher education.

Last year for the Indianapolis School District, there were a total of 393 8th graders who applied which amounts to 27.8% of 8th graders. The district said the program is a wonderful opportunity for so many students.

This year so far, nearly one-fourth, which is 24% of IPS students have applied after three weeks of spreading the news to families about the program. The goal is to have 60% of eligible students apply after eight weeks.

"Our partnership with the Indiana Commission of Higher Education and with Indy Achieves will continue. I can see the role of IPS staff becoming more of a mentor/coaching support because once a 21st Century Scholar enters high school, they have requirements each year to maintain their status as a scholar." – Marc Ransford with the IPS District

House Bill 1449 passed out of the House already and is now on the senate side of the statehouse.

If passed fully it will take effect in the summer with fall 2023 eligible students becoming automatically enrolled.

PATH TO PUBLICATION:
How 3 local Black authors made space for their voices

By CHLOE McGOWAN
chloegm@indyrecorder.com

Coming out of Women's History Month, many have their eyes on the important women making a difference around Indy, from CEOs to local business owners, artists and authors.

Crystal V. Rhodes, Leah Johnson and Dr. LaWanda Jobe are just three of the local Black women whose books aim to inspire, empower and celebrate Black women, girls and children. Though their paths to publication may not have been easy, each agreed writing was what they were born to do.

"Around the 1980s, I went out to California ... I moved out to the San Francisco Bay Area and became a writer," said romance and suspense novelist Crystal V. Rhodes. "I just declared myself a writer, and nobody knew me out there, so nobody questioned it."

Rhodes said she knew she wanted to be a writer when she was eight years old — now having written, published and won awards for her 10 books and 11 plays, including the cozy mystery series "Grandmothers Incorporated," which is co-written with Lillie Barnett.

However, when she first started, Rhodes wanted to write for TV but didn't like LA. She said the "vibe" in San Francisco was better, so playwriting was as close as she could get to TV.

Rhodes' first play, "The Trip," was produced by The Black Repertory Group Theatre in Berkeley, California in the early 80s and has since been produced 40 times around the U.S. and was nominated for a 2023 Helen Hayes Award for Outstanding Ensemble in a Play.

"Originally, it was a one act, and when I realized I could make more money, I added a second act," Rhodes said, laughing. "I quickly learned how to monetize my writing."

Rhodes said she wasn't as lucky with her books; they weren't picked up by publishers as quickly as her plays. Rhodes' first novel, "Sin," was published by Genesis Press in 2000. The story, which follows a Black female minister who is an anti-drug activist but inadvertently falls in love with a drug dealer, went into a second printing in 2008.

"It was quite interesting, I got letters from a few women ministers who really cheered me on," Rhodes said. "I thought that was kinda funny."

However, Rhodes ended up self-publishing many of her novels under CRYSTAL INK publishing.

"When I started getting rejected, I thought 'Oh well, I'll just publish it myself,'" she said. "I just never let anything stop me. I mean, who are these people to tell me no?"

Now, Rhodes said she's achieved almost every dream she ever had as a writer. All that's left is for "Grandmothers Incorporated" — which was adapted into a play that ran Off Broadway — to be turned into a TV series.

"I wasn't asking for Oscars; I wasn't even asking for Broadway. I just wanted my stuff to be published and produced and it has," Rhodes said. "People enjoy my work — that's the most rewarding."

Urban children's book author Dr. LaWanda Jobe also chose the self-publishing route by creating her own publishing company Big Mamma's House Books in 2018.

The company — which is affectionately named in honor of Jobe's grandmother and focuses on literature for children of color — allowed her to learn all the behind-the-scenes work that goes into publishing a book in addition to giving her control and final say about her work.

"There's so many children out here that need to have images and reflections of people that look like them as they turn the page, because I think that that taps into their self-esteem and their reading comprehension," Jobe said. "People are always more interested in reading stories when they see characters that look like this ... that are relatable."

Crystal V. Rhodes

LaWanda Jobe

Leah Johnson

Jobe, who has a Ph.D. in education and previously served as interim Vice Chancellor for Student Success at Ivy Tech University, said she loved Dr. Seuss books as a kid. Jobe said she aspired to recreate his unique style of rhyming and adventure with stories and characters children of color would enjoy and relate to.

"I started thinking about just how kids deal with a lot and there's a lot of stories here," Jobe said. "Things that would be normal to an adult typically could be probably turned or shifted into an adventure for a kid."

She then teamed up with an illustrator and a printing company in Georgia and got to work.

Jobe's published work includes "Tina Tucker Toodles," "I Can't Wait," "Big Mamma's House," "The Tallest" and "Yum Yum Bubble Gum," and features diverse characters who experience an adventure wrapped in a life lesson whether it be healthy eating, anti-bullying or listening to your parents, she said.

Each of her books holds special meaning, and Jobe said two of her books are dedicated to her granddaughters, another is inspired by her grandmother and others incorporate storylines that are important to the Black community.

Though she's written 14-15 books already, the process of illustrating, editing and publishing takes anywhere from six months to a year. As the publisher and the author, Jobe found creative ways to get word out about her books, including donating them to schools and libraries.

Eventually, Jobe said schools and libraries began to reach out to her to get copies and invited her in for book readings. She didn't realize just how popular her books were with kids until she walked into a classroom one day and all the students in the class were holding up her books.

"That's probably the most meaningful thing to me or to walk into a school and the kids are like, 'oh my God, she's the author, of the book!'" Jobe said. "Because I know that I'm getting through to the kids."

Jobe said she hopes to continue putting her books into the hands of kids who need them whether that's in schools, libraries or bookstores — a sentiment shared by writer and artist Leah Johnson.

Johnson became a well-known Indy-based author over the last few years following the release of her debut novel "You Should See Me in a Crown" in 2020 — which made TIME's 100 Best Young Adult Books of All Time and Kirkus Reviews' Best Books of 2020.

She's been writing since she was a child — even admitting to writing fanfiction in grade school. With a background in radio and print journalism, Johnson said she threw a "hail Mary pass" her last year of undergrad and decided to get her master's in fiction writing.

"I did not think that I had the fortitude to make it through 40 years of a career where I was constantly telling stories rooted in Black trauma," she said. "That sort of kicked off the rest of my life, but I knew I wanted to tell stories my entire life."

Although Johnson's path to publication was relatively easy, she said she began to see the cracks in the foundation of how Black and queer authors are marketed after the fact.

"The more you know, the scarier it becomes to put your heart in someone else's hands and ask them to care for it in the form of a book," Johnson said. "Which is why it was difficult for me to write my second novel, cause I was like, 'oh man, now that I know how this works, now that I know how people respond to this kind of work, it's terrifying.'"

Regardless of the challenges, Johnson said she's grateful for the success she's seen and for her readers — even after "You Should See Me in a Crown" was one of many books challenged in the state of Oklahoma for obscenity.

Johnson, a 2-2- Indiana Authors award-winner, said it's heartbreaking because she's writing for children and young adults, and the books she's trying to give them access to, the books she believes can change and save lives, aren't reaching their target audience anymore.

"It's really disheartening to try to sit down at the page and write books knowing that at some point somebody's gonna tell you that your book is obscene," she said. "It's heartbreaking, but I'm not the first, I won't be the last and I'm part of a long legacy of Black queer writers whose work has been the subject of controversy."

But Johnson isn't letting that stop her. She's been incredibly vocal about LGBTQ+ activism and reaching out to local legislators as Trans youth in Indiana, schools and public libraries face controversial bills this session.

"The thing about that kind of legislation is that it reminds me constantly that no matter how much progress I've made personally in my career, in my work, there are a lot of people in this state who are still interested in removing people like me from public life," Johnson said.

Johnson's third book, "Ellie Engle Saves Herself," comes out May 20 and follows Ellie Engle, whose biggest problem is her crush on her middle school BFF until she wakes up with the ability to bring things back to life. Johnson said it's funny, silly and her "favorite thing [she's] ever written."

Poetry Books by various authors

By Terri Schlichenmeyer

Poetry books by various authors.

You have a story to tell.

It's not a long one, but you like to think of yourself as a person of few words anyhow. So why not see how others tell their tales in verse, in form, in total, and with great meaning. Take a look at these new poetry books...

Black culture and the women's movement feature heavily in the poems of Anastacia-Reneé in her new collection, "Side Notes from the Archivist" (Amistad, $16.99).

Beginning in the 1980s with "a badrillion girl bands & boy bands & big group bands," this book looks at life in "retroflect" from a middle-schooler's point of view – which feels quite nostalgic, until the author reaches adulthood in her narrative. From there, the collection reads like a list of "episodes" of a TV show, tales of love of self and others, Black queer life, and a surprisingly overwhelming sense of power to round up the book.

"Side Notes from the Archivist" is a book for older teens and adults only.

When you pick up a copy of "No Sweet Without Brine" by Cynthia Manick (Amistad, $16.99), you'll see that the title tells you everything you need to know: this book will make you smile with bits of gentle poetry that'll suddenly sneak up on you and smack you with the vinegar of reality.

In this random-not-random collection, you'll find an "Ode to JET Magazine," an out-loud musing on parental love, and a list of "Fears and Questions." There's advice for Black girls in this book; advice on living a good life despite disrespectful (and unnecessary) words from a doctor; musings on movies, celebrities, history; being a woman in today's world; and dealing with racism that borders on ridiculousness.

Check it out first, but "No Sweet Without Brine" is a book that might fit for readers ages 15 to adult.

And finally, there's no better time to introduce your 3-to-6-year-old to poetry than today, and "The Knowing" by Ani DiFranco (Penguin, $18.99) may be a great start.

This is a book about a very young girl who has a story to tell. She has color in her hair and skin but that's not who she is. She has many favorite belongings, foods she prefers, games she loves to play, songs she likes to sing, a family, and a village she's lived in all her life. What's important is that she has "The Knowing," which is "underneath all that I know," she says.

This book takes a little getting used-to, but poetry lovers may cherish it. Young readers are never exactly clued in on "The Knowing" but artwork by Julia Mathew gives them imagery that can help parents to spark imagination and spirituality.

If these poetry books don't quite fit what you're looking for, then get yourself to your favorite library or bookstore and let them find for you the book you need. Rhyme, not rhyme all the time, that's fine but not needed, not heeded, not conceited. Don't you want to glory in a poem story?

'Shakespeare's Will' highlights powerful woman forgotten by history

By CHLOE McGOWAN
chloegm@indyrecorder.com

Keeping in time with Women's History Month, Indiana Repertory Theatre is presenting a classic one-woman show for its 50th season.

Onstage now through April 16, "Shakespeare's Will" follows the story of William Shakespeare's wife, Anne Hathaway — or what might have been her story, said Tracy Michelle Arnold, the lead actress in the play. Written by Canadian playwright Vern Theissen, Arnold said the show is a fictional interpretation of what could have been Hathaway's life after her husband moved from Stratford to London to join a theater troupe.

"The play is very much about their marriage — or lack thereof," Arnold said. "They were married definitely, but William Shakespeare, once their three children were born, was asked to be a part of the Queen's Men Players."

During that time Shakespeare would have been writing and performing for court and touring with the troupe. Arnold said his visits and letters back home to his wife and children were rare until they stopped completely until he returned home just before his death.

"The idea in the play . . . is that he wasn't much of a husband after that," Arnold added. "That may be close to true … There's a whole lot more written about Shakespeare than there is about Anne Hathaway."

Janet Allen, Margot Lacy Eccles Artistic Director, said she chose this show as part of her final season with IRT because it elicits a fascination with both historical characters and the little that is known about "women in the past who've played pivotal roles in shaping culture."

"The show is a great insight into a historical character who was very important and who was virtually unrecorded historically," Allen said. "I think we continue to have a lot of fascination with the life of Shakespeare as well as his work, and this play leverages off 'who was that mysterious woman behind the man?'"

In terms of history, Arnold said there are about nine known facts about Hathaway — including when she was born, when she died, when she married Shakespeare and had her children, and what was left to her in Shakespeare's will.

Arnold, who starred in the production 12 years ago alongside former IRT director Brenda DeVita, is reprising her role as Hathaway per Allen's request. A one-person show is strenuous, especially one as physical as "Shakespeare's Will," and Allen said she knew Arnold would bring it to life in new ways.

Returning to the show more than a decade later, Arnold said she's able to bring more conviction to the role. Everyone in the country has learned a lot about inequities in the past few years, not only between different communities of color but between men and women, she said.

"I come to this play with that sort of injustice in my brain, so I think it makes my portrayal of Anne that much more righteous, I suppose," Arnold said. "We want people to walk home from this show talking about it, thinking about it, you know, comparing it to their lives and their life choices and their actions."

One of Allen's goals as a producer is to bring in plays that are accessible and compelling to everyone in the audience, no matter their age, demographic, knowledge of theater or even their seat in the audience.

"We need a lot broader storytelling, not only in terms of gender, but race [and] culture," Allen said. "So, there's been a tremendous effort to expand the repertoire and I think this play is definitely one of those efforts."

Both Allen and Arnold's favorite scene in the play is when Hathaway recounts a dream she has of being a bird and flying over the Globe Theater listening to Shakespeare's play and "gathering worlds like a mother bird gathering worms to take back to her child."

"It's a beautiful recognition about the power of a script and an actor and design and staging," Allen said. "It's a very evocative moment. Part of it is the power of the staging, a lot of it is the power of Tracy's skill … It's a very physical moment in the theater, and that combination of things is really compelling."

"Shakespeare's Will" is running at the IRT through April 16. Tickets start at $25 and are available at irtlive.com.

Sysco Strike Could Impede Food Supply Throughout Indy

BY NORAL PARHAM III
noralp@IndyRecorder.com

Sysco, one of the global leaders in stocking and circulating food and non-food products to restaurants, cafes, schools, lodges, bars, diners and others, has found itself in the center of a strike.

Nearly 200 Sysco Indianapolis employees went on strike in late March.

The unionization was led by Teamsters Union Local 135. The union representative revealed that unfair labor procedures after uneasy contract negotiations led to the strike.

"We have had it with (Sysco Indianapolis) and their disregard for workers," Brian Thomas, one of the workers on strike at Sysco shared. "We're tired of being taken advantage of and we are seriously concerned about benefits, workplace safety, and work-life balance."

Sysco Indianapolis is not the only Sysco location on strike.

Union workers at Sysco Louisville, led by Teamsters Local 89, have mobilized against their employers.

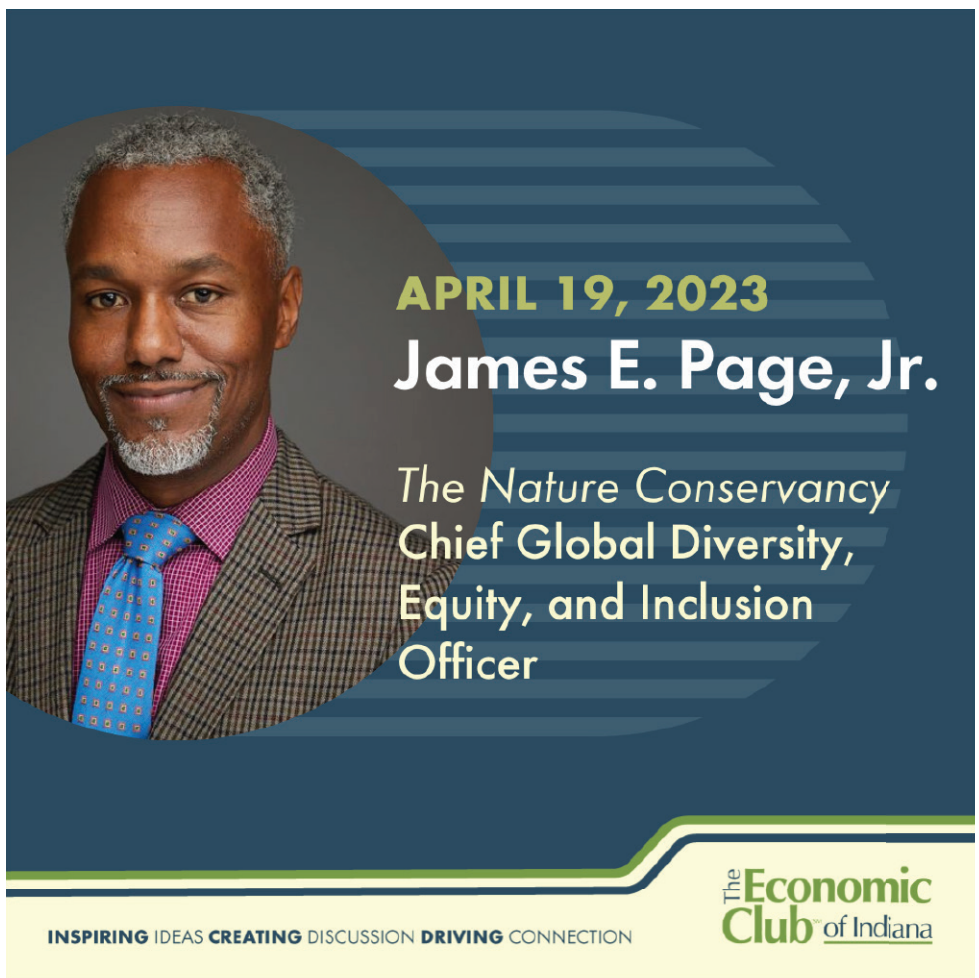

"We're asking to be compensated fairly for the hard work that we do," Michael Bonner, a driver for Sysco Louisville shared. "The company would rather put (Sysco workers and customers) in a negative situation than compensate us (equally)."

Many recipients of Sysco Indianapolis products have already expressed concern regarding the strike.

"It's an unfortunate situation," one Food & Beverage Manager of a Downtown Indy hotel and bar shared. "The strike is going to halt the delivery of a lot of produce and cleaning products for us."

On a national level, Sysco faces public backlash due to its involvement in violating a handful of U.S. labor laws. Teamsters revealed that they are currently in talks with "several Sysco-branded locations across the country." They also revealed that they are going to hold "greedy employers accountable."

TRUMP

Shortly before 2 p.m. EST, Trump became the first former U.S. President arrested and criminally charged. This after becoming the first to have been impeached twice.

"Can't believe this is happening," Trump posted as he headed into a courtroom where he found, perhaps for the first time in his adult life, that he wasn't in control of the proceedings in front of him.

It's an ironic, if not predictable, fall for a man who campaigned in 2016 by mercilessly leading chants of "Lock her up," against Democrat Hillary Clinton.

And as unprecedented and surreal was the arrest, the charges leveled against the bombastic MAGA leader reveal what prosecutors claim is a man who operated as if he were above the law for a long time – including when he ruled the Oval Office.

Indeed, the freshly unsealed indictment brought by Manhattan District Attorney Alvin Bragg included 34 criminal charges – all felonies related to falsifying business records, including several relating to allegedly making hush money payments to porn star Stormy Daniels and former Playboy model Karen McDougal.

Judge Juan Merchan, a former prosecutor with 16 years on the bench, unsealed Indictment No. 71543-23, after Trump's team reviewed them.

Bragg alleged that Trump falsified business records to hide other crimes, including illegally pumping up his presidential campaign with ill-gotten cash.

Specifically, the indictment alleges that Trump conspired with others to undermine the integrity of the 2016 election, a contest in which Trump defeated Clinton.

Prosecutors alleged that Trump took part in an unlawful "catch and kill" scheme that included an illegal $130,000 payment he ordered to suppress information that would hurt his presidential campaign.

Trump allegedly violated state and local election laws, making the charges a felony.

The charges potentially carry a four-year prison sentence, which could mean that Trump, the current GOP 2024 presidential frontrunner, has entered a race that could end with him either in the White House or in prison.

Despite an apparent somber mood displayed by Trump which signaled just how weighty the proceedings were, his campaign released a fundraising email seeking contributions of at least $47 for a T-shirt that contained a fake mugshot of the ex-president emblazoned with the words "Not Guilty."

Reportedly, Trump has raised more than $8 million since word of an indictment spread.

With security a big issue in the ex-president's arraignment, prosecutors in Atlanta and Washington continue to investigate Trump, which could also lead to criminal charges, were provided the ability of witnessing how New York handles a case involving a divisive former commander in chief in a safe and drama-free way could be a critical test case.

The potential cases against Trump in Atlanta and Washington relate to the former president's interference in the 2020 presidential election in Georgia and the January 6 insurrection on Capitol Hill that left several people dead.

Many top Republicans, including some of Trump's potential rivals in next year's GOP presidential primary, have criticized the case against him.

President Joe Biden, who has yet to announce that he's seeking reelection next year, and other leading Democrats have primarily had little to say about it.

Trump is scheduled to return to Manhattan for a second court date in December.

Prosecutors insist their case against Trump has nothing to do with politics.

"Manhattan is home to the country's most significant business market," Bragg stated.

"We cannot allow New York businesses to manipulate their records to cover up criminal conduct. As this office has done time and time again, we today uphold our solemn responsibility to ensure that everyone stands equal before the law.

HOMES

cited and willing to make history."

The 3D printer uses solid concrete and epoxy flooring. It promises to process minimal waste with over 78% eco-friendly materials.

Homes would cost just over $100,000 to build depending on individual customization and would be priced between $120,000 and $150,000.

They would offer jobs to people as young as 15, veterans and even those with criminal backgrounds to be certified in operating the machine along with building out the rest of the homes to finish.

Starting pay would be between $25 and $40 an hour.

Many state and business officials are in support of the plan, because many feel individuals impacted at the core of the current housing crisis will benefit from the initiative.

"The average annual income of people who come to us is $8,400 a year," said Larry Smith, the CEO of Fathers and Family, "That's because they're either unemployed or underemployed. The other issue is homelessness."

He said this plan would be a literal game changer, because it would allow them to employ the men that they serve for the nonprofit.

It would boost job placement for individuals with criminal histories, disabilities, veterans and many more.

Marion County Prosecutor, Ryan Mears said far too often previously incarcerated people transitioning back into society can't because they're faced with discrimination.

"What we notice with this plan is we're able to get people into housing and jobs and we're able to keep them out of the criminal justice system," said Ryan Mears.

Andrea McGordan, Vice President at Old National Bank, supports the initiative and said the company would assist in funding for homebuyers.

Larry Williams with the Indy Black Chamber said their partnership with Circle Up Indy supports efforts in gaining capital, contracts for contractors, wealth building and business education.

"When we talk about generational wealth you must have housing and we don't own a lot in our community. As a Black chamber we're going to help," said Larry Williams.

Circle Up Indy plans on receiving the shipped machine by September.

Throughout the summer they want to certify at least 60 people who can work on the project.

They're looking to seek more funding from businesses and corporations. The city hasn't pledged any money toward the effort.

The organization is also seeking $500,000 for land to create a headquarters. They hope to create long term jobs and house more acquired machines that other cities and states can utilize through an Indianapolis main office.

The organization has raised $15,000 so far.

Be Bold and Be Brave: A Plea for Change on Gun Laws

By: David McGuire

December 14, 2012, 27 dead including 20 children ages 6 and 7.

January 23, 2018, 2 students 15 years old were killed/16 were shot.

February 14, 2018, 17 people were killed and 17 more were injured.

May 18, 2018, 10 people were killed and 13 were injured.

May 24, 2022, 22 dead including 19 students.

March 27, 2023, 7 people killed 3 students, 2 administrators, 1 teacher.

Enough is enough. It is time for us to be bold and brave and to do something once and for all about the gun violence in this country. As listed above, too many children are being murdered at the hands of sick people who use guns to commit horrific violence on innocent people.

As we are days removed from another school shooting that took the life of six people, including three nine-year-old children, I make this plea for us to be bold and brave. We still have individuals that do not see that we are in a crisis, a crisis of our own making, but a crisis that we together can end. How many more teachers and children must be killed in schools before putting aside our differences and uniting to solve this issue? I am calling on our politicians and elected officials.

How can Tik Tok unite politicians from both sides, but the murder of children in a school cannot?

Gun laws in this country must change. When the second amendment to the constitution of the United States was adopted in 1791, a typical revolutionary-era musket had one round in the magazine. It fired at a muzzle velocity of 1,000 feet per second. A typical modern-day AR-15 has thirty rounds in the magazine and fires a muzzle velocity of 3,260 feet per second. Times and guns have changed, but our gun laws have not changed.

We displayed examples of boldness and bravery when it came to us uniting in the aftermath of these tragedies. I plead for us to be bold and brave before another strategy strikes. Let us not wait for another shooting to have these conversations. We had enough tragedies to date that we no longer need to wait to make changes.

My heart breaks each time I hear about another shooting especially when that shooting happens in a school. My heart breaks for the victims' families, the school community, and the hope of a future that was taken away without justification.

My heart breaks because, again, we have to send out notices to our families about safety updates that turn our schools into unwelcoming institutions instead of the symbols of joy and safe place. Safety.

My heart breaks because now we have to do another active shooter drill and explain to a group of kindergarteners why they have to hide in the corner of the room with the lights off, be silent as someone comes around and pretends to the break into the classroom. We should not practice these in schools, but because of where we are in this country, you never know if your school will be next.

We have a choice. A choice to be bold and brave and fight for change or be cowards and be afraid to fail and do nothing. I would rather be bold and brave and fight for change and possibly fail than do nothing and fail.

Doing nothing means more children die in our schools.

Taylor Schumann, author and activist, once said, "I want more politicians to lose their jobs to do the right thing. I am calling on our politicians to step up and take a bold and brave stance. Maybe your service is not about continually winning elections but winning the right one so you can make a brave once-in-a-lifetime choice."

Unfortunately, some politicians see books in school libraries that teach about the true history of this country as a bigger threat to American freedom and democracy than an AR-15 used by dangerous people to gun down innocent children in a school.

These murders make me feel it is easier in this country to get a gun than to teach a book about history that uplifts Black and brown people.

Let's shift our focus on violence in schools and away from banning books.

I want freedom in this country. I want parents to feel free to send their children to school and not worry about them being shot dead.

I want everyone, from politicians to school leaders to civic leaders, to voters in this country to be bold and brave and fight for changes in gun laws.

Double Drivel

By LARRY SMITH

It's as clear as black and white. I'm referring to the reaction that star basketball player Angel Reese received after taunting opposing star Caitlin Clark in last Sunday's NCAA Women's Championship game. Reese is Black and plays for the LSU Tigers. Clark is white and plays for the University of Iowa, whom LSU defeated.

Clark is a dominant athlete – and has the swagger that often accompanies such prowess. Reese is an outstanding baller in her own right (who also flaunts her skill). Both players performed masterfully throughout the tournament, which contributed to record viewership.

Unfortunately, the Tigers' conquest is somewhat overshadowed by the controversy that followed Reese's taunting of Clark near the end of the title game. Specifically, Reese employed John Cena's famous "you can't see me" gesture. She also followed Clark for a few steps and pointed to the finger on which she'd wear her championship ring. This resulted in Reese being called "everything but a child of God" (as we say in church).

To be clear, Clark has a history of taunting opposing players, including in this tournament. Some people have alleged that the "difference" is that Clark only does so in front of her teammates. Yet, a review of several of her games proves that just isn't the case. For example, Clark told a Louisville player to "shut up" because her team was losing by 15 points. She also sarcastically "waved off" a South Carolina player in the Final Four, essentially daring her to shoot a three-pointer. Perhaps most relevantly, Clark taunted an opposing player on the court with the "you can't see me" move. (Cena himself tweeted his approval).

Don't take my word for it; all of this can easily be accessed online. (Then again, millions of Americans don't believe what they see – especially during the last few years). If Clark received criticism for these actions, it was rare and muted. Certainly, no one questioned her "character," as has repeatedly occurred with Reese. Fortunately, in response to the firestorm, Clark said: "I don't think that Angel should be criticized at all" for taunting her. Apparently, she isn't the damsel in distress that she's been made out to be.

For the record, trash talking has always been a part of sports – whether in the driveway, at the YMCA, in colleges, or on professional fields and courts. Also, for the record, I'm a fan of trash talking. Thus, I have no problem with Clark or Reese. My problem is with the amnesia and hypocrisy that too frequently attach to Black athletes, who are lambasted for doing the same things that white athletes do. (Larry Bird is widely considered to be the NBA's most prolific trash talker, but is never criticized for that distinction). Haranguing and even accosting Black athletes – often for merely being Black – is an outgrowth of white Americans' racial animosity.

The fact is that this controversy is infinitely bigger than these two young women. It started long before Clark and Reese – or even their grandparents – were born. Millions of people keep trying to wish away this nation's racism by banning "CRT" (which rarely is CRT) and by mindlessly using the word "woke" as a magical incantation to ward off societal change. That's much easier than confronting our painful truths.

This controversy is merely another beachhead in America's endless uncivil war regarding race. We remember the reaction to John Carlos and Tommie Smith on the Olympic podium. We remember that Bird was a "very hard worker" who had a "high basketball IQ," whereas Magic Johnson was "street smart" and "naturally gifted." We remember the disparaging remarks about the early 90s UNLV Runnin' Rebels because of their style of play – and the remarks about the Fab Five because of their style of shorts. And, of course, we know the disgusting way in which Serena Williams is repeatedly disrespected.

Outside of sports, we remember the attempted embarrassment of Vanessa Williams when she became the first Black Miss America. We remember how the elegant, accomplished, and highly educated Michelle Obama was talked about in comparison to Melania Trump (who is, evidently, a fan of Mrs. Obama's speeches).

If you're offended by Angel Reese's actions, but not by these examples – and the thousands of others that I could reference – you're part of the problem. Attacking Reese's "character" is simply coded language for… you know what. Saying that this is "not about race" won't fly. In the words of James Baldwin (who in turn quoted Ike and Tina Turner), "I can't believe what you say because I see what you do."

Jones: It all adds up

By Camike Jones
camikej@indyrecorder.com

Calcea Johnson and Ne'Kiya Jackson, two Black female high school students from Louisiana, have solved a centuries old mathematical theorem in a way that had never been done before. While solving a bonus math problem at school, they were able to prove Pythagoras's theorem using trigonometry. Their discovery is significant because proving this theorem has stumped mathematicians for more than 2,000 years!

Over the last several years, there has been a push to introduce STEM (science, technology, engineering, and math) to marginalized groups – namely girls and Black and brown people. While jobs in STEM are increasing exponentially, access to the field has often been limited. In order to take advantage of this growing market, marginalized communities need resources and opportunities.

With the door closed to so many, one wonders what other significant innovations have been missed because someone was simply not welcome to contribute. For those who have managed to make their way into the STEM field, the welcome they have received has often left much to be desired. I submit that the talent to think mathematically and solve complex scientific queries has always been there. What has not been available for everyone are the opportunities to demonstrate these talents.

The community takes pride in Johnson and Jackson who have achieved something no one thought was even possible. These girls have shown what can be accomplished when faced with what others deem an insurmountable task. With the support of the teaching staff, they were willing to take on the challenge. Their courage has lead to a discovery that may change the way math is taught for years to come. They were given the opportunity to do what had never been done before and they succeeded. They have not only proven Pythagoras's theorem, but they have also proven that when you add effort, belief, and opportunity, what once seemed impossible becomes possible.

50 Cent is up to 10 percent

STAFF

Business mogul Curtis Jackson and multi-talented rap music superstar 50 Cent are the same person – and both sides of the same person are noteworthy.

50 Cent recently signed a multi-year deal with the Indiana Pacers to "empower urban kids to develop the confidence, tools and knowledge (necessary) to excel in life." Part of the deal also involves increasing 50 Cent's Sire Spirits brand throughout Gainbridge Fieldhouse from the floor level on up – courtside, balcony level and suite level.

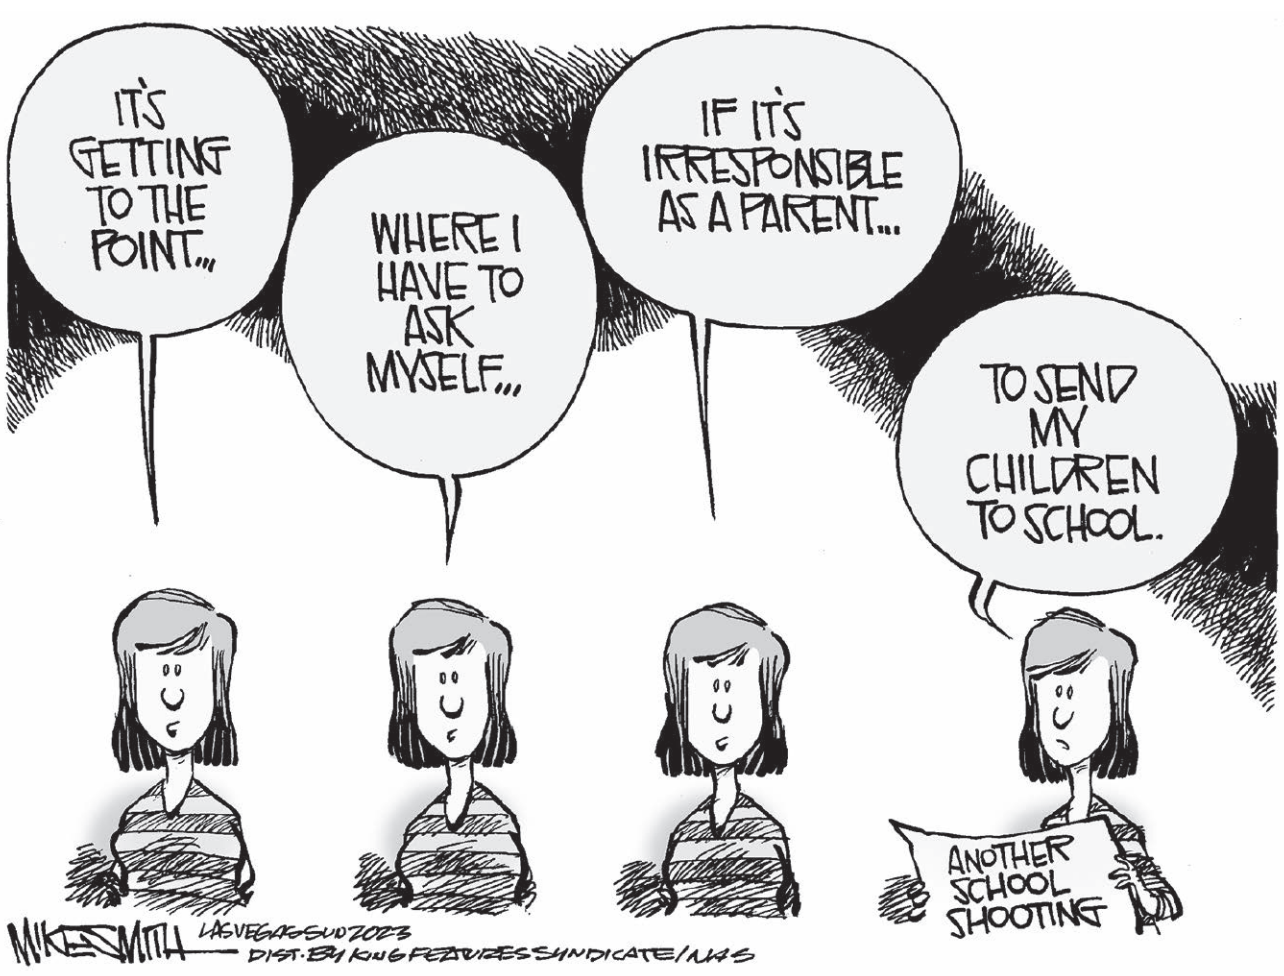

But just as importantly, the Pacers agreement isn't 50 Cent's first major business deal inside the National Basketball Association, which has 30 teams. He has also inked deals with the Sacramento Kings and the Houston Rockets, which include youth-oriented activities such as toy drives, turkey drives, career days and business labs.

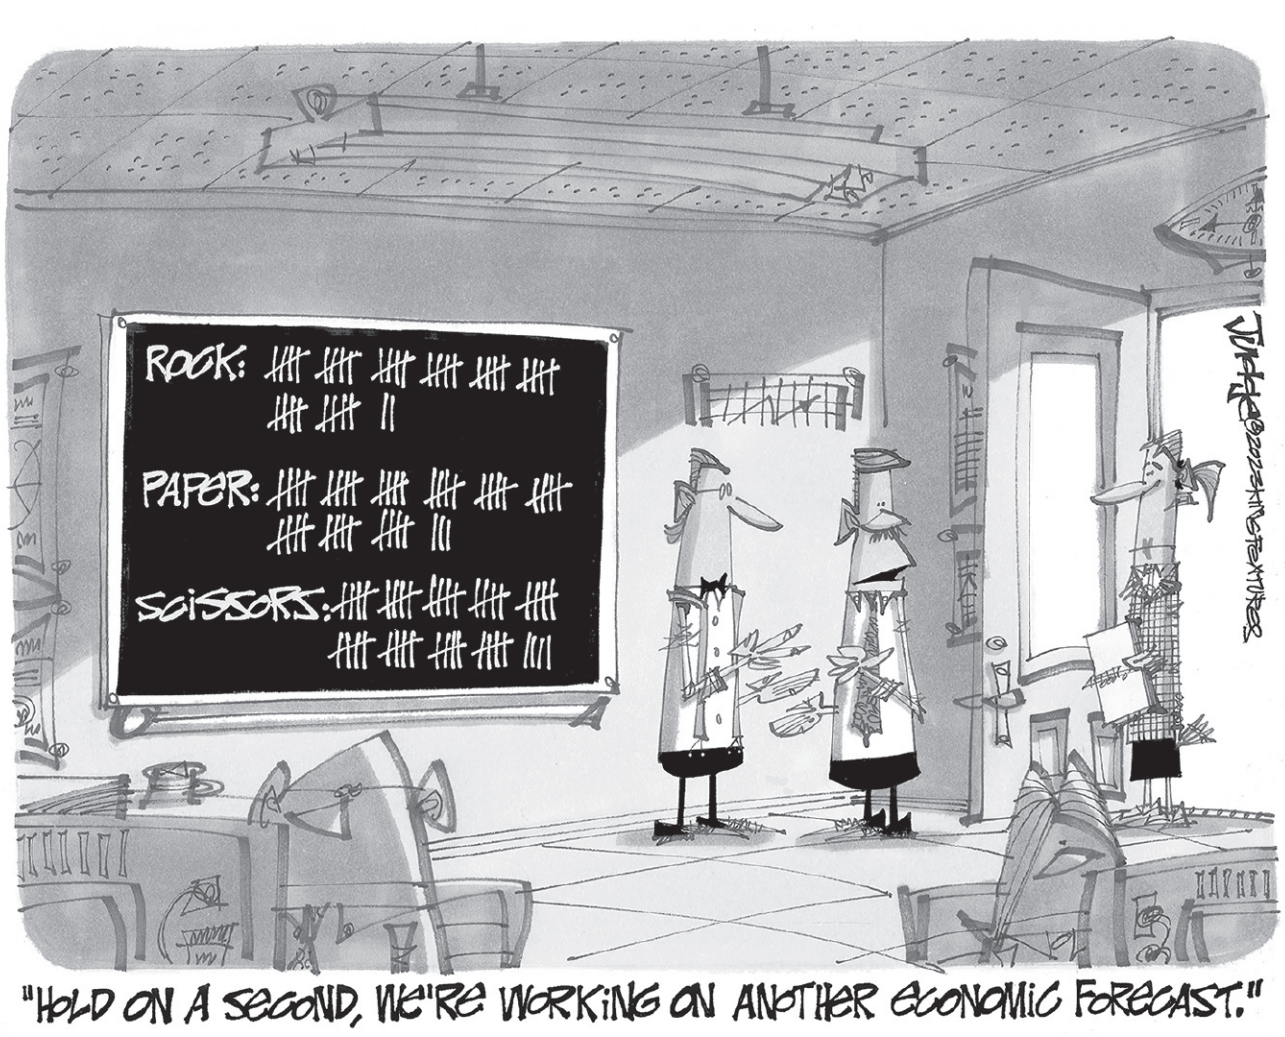

This means 50 Cent has lucrative deals with 10% of NBA teams.

That in and of itself is impressive. But it is especially so for a man who survived a near-fatal shooting before he became a multi-platinum award-winning musician.

What the NBA deals show is 50 Cent's ambition, drive and business acumen.

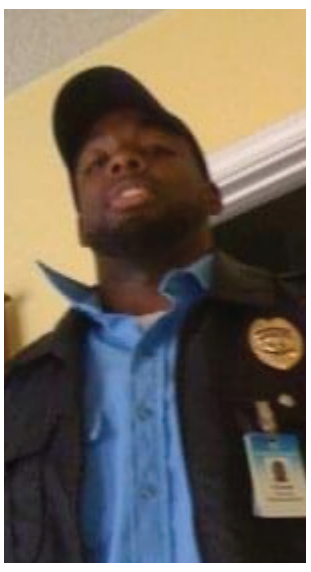

As his charitable organization, the G-Unity Foundation, works to touch the lives of the young people in cities where 50 Cent has major business deals, we hope that the young people of Indianapolis will be moved by more than just his rap music. We hope that they will also see the ambition, drive and business sense that has helped 50 Cent open the board room doors of NBA teams.

Black doctor defies the odds and wants more representation in medicine

By Jade Jackson
jadej@indyrecorder

Dr. Russell Ledet is the only Black man to match into a triple residency program anywhere in the United States in 2022. He's also the first Black man to enter the program at IU and will be training over the next 5 years in pediatrics, adult psychiatry and child and adolescent psychiatry.

He wants to help children in the communities he's come from with their mental health.

"Accessibility to mental health services is a problem right now because we don't have that many child and adolescent psychologists in the state of Indiana," said Dr. Ledet.

From hospital security guard to triple residency, he's defied the odds, but he wants other people that look like him to also be a part of medicine.

"I don't want to be the only. The goal is to make sure that I'm not the only one, but that's easier said than done. We're fighting against serious issues in terms of why it's so hard to diversify," said Dr. Ledet.

There's a lot of factors that limit minorities from becoming physicians.

"How much do you think it costs to apply for medical school? Try $5,000 to $10,000. So, think about it. If you come from a marginalized community and after you just finished spending all of this money on college and have to come off five racks or ten racks, you'd be like 'What?!'" said Dr. Ledet.

Medical students can expect to go into a quarter of a million dollars in debt.

With only the hope and promise that one could get into residency to become a doctor, it's easy to give up attending medical school.

That's why Dr. Ledet co-founded 15 White Coats.

The nonprofit's mission is to develop scholarships, facilitate access to culturally relevant literature and inspire and mentor the youth for tomorrow.

They've raised over millions of dollars to give to minority students wanting to attend medical school.

The money supports them throughout their schooling too.

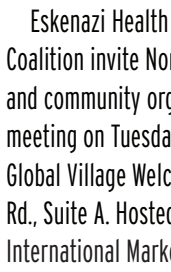

"The visual representation matters too. It's not just the fact that I have a white coat. It's not the fact that I have eight letters behind my name. It's how I show up," said Dr. Ledet.

Purposefully showing that a Black man from Louisiana with an accent and locs in his hair can be a doctor.

His journey has come with obstacles and there's been plenty of situations where people have doubted his abilities, but he's putting his energy into progress.

Eskenazi Health Partners with International Marketplace Coalition to Examine Health Equity Barriers

Eskenazi Health Center Forest Manor

Health equity zones are distinct areas where Eskenazi Health and community partners will work together to build healthy neighborhoods by addressing long-term social determinants of health, with the goal of increasing the life expectancy of area residents, and Eskenazi Health is excited to launch health equity zone initiatives near three Eskenazi Health Center sites. Those locations include Eskenazi Health Center West 38th Street – International Marketplace, Eskenazi Health Center East 38th Street – Northeast Corridor and Eskenazi Health Center Grassy Creek – Far Eastside.

The Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC) defines health equity as the state in which everyone has a fair and just opportunity to attain their highest level of health. As an example of how necessary health equity zones are, in Central Indiana the life expectancy in Fishers is 84.8, compared to downtown Indianapolis at 68.0 ... a gap of 16.8 years.

Eskenazi Health and International Marketplace Coalition invite Northwest Indianapolis residents and community organizations to a public meeting on Tuesday, April 11, at 6 p.m. at the Global Village Welcome Center, 4233 Lafayette Rd., Suite A. Hosted by Eskenazi Health and International Marketplace Coalition, the meeting will allow those in attendance to provide insight into the community, discuss community needs and speak directly with leaders from Eskenazi Health, Eskenazi Health Center and International Marketplace Coalition to help create goals and implement a community plan for the International Marketplace Health Equity Zone. Doors will open at 5:30 p.m. and dinner will be provided for event attendees.

Health equity zones are defined areas Eskenazi Health and community partners will work together to build healthy neighborhoods by addressing long-term social determinants of health, with the goal of increasing the life expectancy of area residents. Together with neighborhood residents and community partners, a collaborative community plan will be implemented to address immediate and systemic barriers through a holistic approach to improve:

- Food as medicine - Eating healthy and nutritious food
- Mental health wellness - Fostering resilience and healthy mindset
- Health lifestyles - Creating the conditions for healthy living
- Transportation and connectivity - Connecting to health, education, and employment
- Housing - Supporting quality affordable and safe housing
- Community connectedness - Building social capital and connection
- Safety - Living free of violence, including intimate partner violence and child abuse
- Economic opportunity - Creating pathways to economic self-sufficiency ministration? No, but it's part of placemaking that is a priority," he said.

Abdul-Hakim Shabazz is a lawyer and political commentator. He discussed his proposal to bring back the public safety director position to deal with record levels of homicides.

When asked about statements he's made in the past, Shabazz said he stands by his words.

Shabazz also said Indianapolis could be the capital of the Midwest.

"You start by poaching Chicago jobs," he said.

In response to a question about how to improve election turnout, Shabazz was hopeful this primary would draw interest.

"It's really more about the candidates than anything else – if you have competitive races and quality, candidates people will come out," he said.

Pastor James Jackson echoed what many Republicans have argued for in the past as a tactic to improve public safety.

"The importance of ending the release of repeat, violent offenders," he said.

Jackson also said there needs to be better connection between people and resources to end homelessness and address the housing crisis.

Businessman John Couch said crime reduction is an issue of self-control. He said he's disappointed in many areas overseen by the current administration.

"Crime, infrastructure, economic development, items that were promised by the city-county council, they're not getting done," Couch said.

Earlier in the week, Democratic candidates met for a similar forum at Indy Star. Questions were sourced from the public. There are nine people running for Indianapolis mayor in the upcoming primary election.

Pendleton Pike Walmart store food license reinstated

By TIMORIA CUNNINGHAM
timoriac@indyrecorder.com

The Marion County Public Health Department has fully reinstated the food license for the grocery section of the Walmart store on Pendleton Pike, following a closure due to a rodent infestation.

The health department said all the food areas in the store located at 10735 Pendleton Pike are cleared for operation, but that the MCPHD will continue to monitor.

The grocery section was closed for more than a week following news of unsanitary conditions. The license was reinstated as of March 29, officials said.

While it was good news for some, it raised questions of consumer safety for others.

Lawrence township resident Danielle Yates said she shops at the Pendleton Pike Walmart roughly three times a week. Yates does grocery shopping for her job that assists youth around the city and chooses this store due to its convenience.

"This is closer to my house than Kroger and sometimes Kroger doesn't have the variety that Walmart has but it's a little scary when they say we're shutting down because they lost their food license," Yates said in an interview this morning.

Although Yates is glad the store is now open, she hopes Walmart is making sure customers are getting good quality food.

She hopes the MCPHD "crack down on these stores that are not doing what they are supposed to do for our safety," Yates said.

Walmart store manager Grant Johnson refused to comment on how the store plans to maintain its food license.

The Recorder reached out to Walmart's media team for comment and was not given a response.

Bonding while Biking; Black Girls Do Bike Indy rides out

By Jade Jackson
JadeJ@Indyrecorder.com

Meeting up at Cleo's Bodega on Dr. M.L.K Jr. Street was intentional for the group of women sporting bright colorful cycling tops that read "Black Girls Do Bike."

Supporting Black business, they along with other women there in cycling clothing enjoy a morning drink while they meet and greet with each other.

Equally colorful bikes aligned the side of the building that belonged to the group.

"I love to ride, but I usually ride with my husband and family. I heard about Black Girls Do Bike when someone asked if we were a part of the organization already since I was out biking. So, I looked them up and was excited to join their rides," said Tanya Davis.

Davis was meeting everybody in the group for the first time.

They were set to take off that morning and ride along the bike trails of White River Green Bay.

This is their first ride for the year.

Black Girls Do Bike is a national organization with Black Girls Do Bike Indy (BGDBI) being one of its chapters. Founded by Chyri McLain-Jackson in 2014, the goal of it is to help people feel more confident about getting on bikes, and ensure that they ride effectively, safely, and legally.

"It was important to foster a community of women of color who share a common goal and love of cycling. I encourage bike advocacy, education, safety, and volunteerism in the community," said McLain-Jackson.

Tanya Davis is biking for the first time with Black Girls Do Bike Indy

One reason she started the Indianapolis chapter was because in previous years she participated in endurance sporting events with the Leukemia and Lymphoma Society, but during her training she didn't see anyone who looked like her.

The group is inclusive to all races and genders with the focus being on Black women. It's about bonding and sisterhood.

With issues like heart disease, high blood pressure, and obesity disparities in health that affect them at higher rates, encouraging healthy habits like cycling is more than just not deciding to bike.

"I have locs," said Cheria Caldwell, one of the ride leaders for BGDBI, "Usually if my hair is in a style, I take it down so that I put my helmet on and go out riding."

While Caldwell laid out the rules for the group ride inside the shop, she emphasized the importance of wearing a helmet.

One woman didn't bring one for the exact reason of not messing up her hair.

Caldwell said above all else health and safety are the most important. She buys the largest size helmet which is an XL to give more room for her hairstyles.

A lot of women in the organization will wear scarfs or bandanas to protect their hair underneath a helmet.

"But it can be a challenge. I remember one time I had my hair in a really nice bun and I was like dang, I really don't want to take my hair down, but I want to go on a bike ride," said Caldwell.

She took it down.

These are the type of barriers that can deter minorities from participating in cycling, but BGDBI's mission is to create an open and safe space for new riders.

This means teaching proper technique and bike care along with safety.

"This wind is disrespectful," said one rider once they mounted outside.

Knowing some of the first-time challenges that come with not being supported by cycling groups, BGDBI prides themselves on how they nurture connections by offering an enjoyable experience.

Even with biking barriers, the organization meets people where they are.

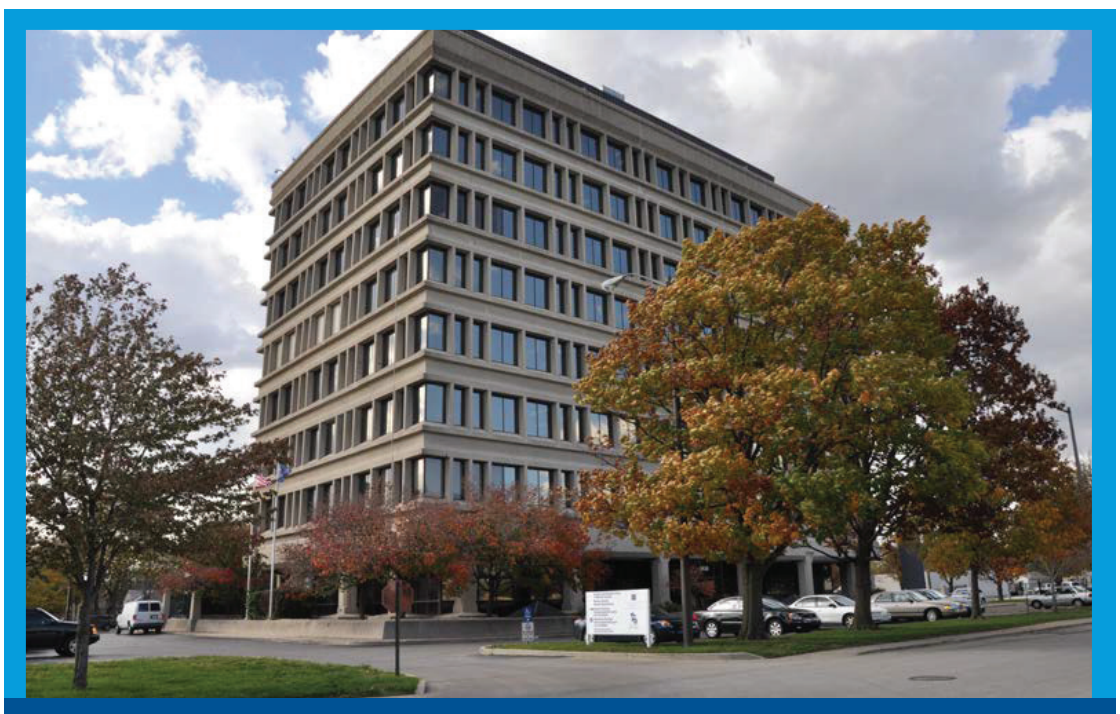

"Please, don't be afraid to let us know how you're feeling," said Caldwell to the group, "We understand how it can be if you don't understand something or if you feel like to you need to slow down."

Leaders are always in the front and the back of the line of riders so that no one ever gets left behind.

Black Girls Do Bike Indy ride seasonally throughout the year starting in April and can go as late as October depending on the weather.

They have rides throughout the week scheduled four times a month on different sides of town.

Eskenazi Health Landmark Initiative Addresses Health Inequity

Eskenazi Health recently announced a commitment to generational change, working in partnership with neighborhoods of Indianapolis to advance health equity and improve life expectancy.

Beyond Barriers is a $60 million initiative to support Eskenazi Health's longstanding commitment to addressing the social drivers that impact the health and well-being of residents in Marion County and across Central Indiana.

The campaign will provide funding to expand existing programs and access to services while also establishing three initial health equity zones.

With facilities deliberately placed in low-income neighborhoods and along IndyGo bus routes, efforts by Eskenazi Health have taken the form of free health coaching focused on nutrition and physical activity, clinic-based and drive-thru food pantries, investment in creating walkable communities, a violence-recidivism reduction program, a Medical-Legal Partnership, free resources for individuals battling cancer, support for new mothers, vaccination clinics, health fairs, and more.

"Everything we do is in the interest of health equity," said Lisa Harris, M.D., chief executive officer of Eskenazi Health. "Making the opportunity of good health and access to care available to everyone in our community isn't just a component of our mission, it is our mission."

Health equity zones are defined geographic areas where through shared vision and joint implementation of health goals, multiple organizations work to address long-term social determinants of health including racial equity and economic mobility to increase life expectancy.

By 2025, health equity zones will be implemented at three Eskenazi Health Center sites: Eskenazi Health Center West 38th Street – International Marketplace, Eskenazi Health Center East 38th Street – Northeast Corridor, and Eskenazi Health Center Grassy Creek – Far Eastside.

"As stewards of the overall health of Indianapolis, we know it's up to us to create and enact change," said Paul Babcock, president and chief executive officer of Health & Hospital Corporation of Marion County. "This work to address the social determinants of health, which impacts how long our residents are living, is now poised to move into a tangible execution stage that will create lasting improvements in health equity."

"Many people in our community experience health disparities as a result of inequitable access to health care and human service resources," said Virginia A. Caine, M.D., director and chief medical officer of the Marion County Public Health Department. "We need to continually ask about the health equity challenges our clients face and how we are addressing these challenges as a department, a school of medicine, an organization, a public health system, and in the community at large."

The early products of this commitment are already making an impact. Since opening in 2022, the Fresh for You Market in front of the Sidney & Lois Eskenazi Hospital has provided easy access for patients and residents to healthy and nutritious food.

"The partnership with Crooked Creek Food Pantry, Healthy Me and the Food as Medicine program are just a few examples of how Eskenazi Health, with support from all the divisions of the Health and Hospital Corporation, has been creating the foundation for what is now a unified effort of the entire city to make health equity attainable," said Robert Lazard, chair of the Board of Trustees of the Health & Hospital Corporation of Marion County.

Future goals including creating more health equity zones to address the evolving needs of neighborhoods across Marion County.

Holy Waiting ..... Saturday Speaks

By Reverend Sheila P. Spencer

"Wait for the Lord; be strong and take heart and wait for the Lord." Psalm 27:14

"... weeping may stay for the night, but rejoicing comes in the morning." Psalm 30:5b

"Be still and know that I am God ..." Psalm 46:10

We have entered into Holy Week. We commemorate the Last Supper that Jesus ate with his disciples and how he served them by washing their feet. We prepare for Good Friday and remember the crucifixion. Then we know the Resurrection Sunday is coming.

But I invite you not to forget Holy Saturday.

It's the day in between the weeping of the crucifixion and the joy of resurrection.

If crucifixion is the departure point and the resurrection is the destination, you have to go through Holy Saturday. It is the day that, by its very nature, calls us to slow down and wait.

Holy Saturday is the meantime, in between time ..... things always happen in the meantime, in between time.

It is the day where it seems that nothing is happening yet everything is happening at the same time. Jesus is in the tomb and all appears hidden. But just because something is hidden, doesn't mean It's not important. There is holiness in the hidden. There is power in what we can't see.

Holy Saturday makes us wait, we can't edit, delete or go around it. We try to do busy work, yet it calls us to be still and ..... wait. We can't pay extra for rush delivery ... we have to wait.

Holy Saturday calls us to wait and it's inconvenient.... But we are called to wait and sit in this place. One of my lessons from hospital chaplaincy is that sometimes I was called to just be fully present and sit with others in their grief, the loss, anger and unknown. Holy Saturday calls us to sit in the grief, sit in the loss, the anger and the unknown.

It seems like for the last year we've been in an extended Holy Saturday holding pattern. Waiting in the midst of the unknown. This year has made us sit in the uncomfortable and the unknown. It seems like an extended pause. Yet Holy Saturday invites us to do just that ... wait.

There's power in the hidden, when it seems like nothing is happening, yet everything is happening at the same time. Growth happens in darkness. Plants grow when seeds are planted in the deep rich darkness of the soil. The caterpillar cannot transform into the butterfly without being in the darkness of the cocoon. Photos have been developed in darkrooms.

There is holiness in the hidden and power in what we can't see.

But it calls us to wait...

Take time to wait on this Holy Saturday ... take the time to sit in the tomb that will lead to your resurrection.

Resurrection is coming, but don't dismiss and rush the wait. But Holy Saturday always precedes the Resurrection.

Holy Saturday ... I will sit with you.

Waiting in this,
Sheila

DIVERSITY ISN'T A TAGLINE;
It's a tool for Indiana businesses

By Jade Jackson jadej@indyrecorder.com

"There are even companies in this room today who would not acknowledge their history of lack of diversity. We've got a long way to go, and we've got a lot of ground to make up," said John Girton Jr.

He was a part of over two dozen people representing different companies who filled a room inside the Indianapolis International Airport to discuss diversity, equity, and inclusion.

Girton is the vice president of marketing, communications, and external relations for Martin University. He's been in marketing for the last 40 years and said he was the first African American leader for many organizations throughout his career.

Historically the marketing, communications and advertisement industries have done a lot to damage minority communities because of their lack of representation, according to Girton.

"A lot of companies will get these proposals to market to certain communities, all the while not using certain communities to be creative. It's one thing to put people of color in front of the camera, but it's another thing to have people of color controlling the narrative with the scripts and directing," said Girton.

That was the reason for the event on Thursday morning.

Indy's American Marketing Association (AMA) wanted to hold a discussion on responsible marketing.

Holli Harrington is the diversity officer for the Indianapolis Airport Authority and said the location was befitting for the event since the company sustains a diverse and inclusive workforce.

52% of their workforce are minority and women, and 30% of every dollar spent by travelers is on minority and veteran enterprises.

Harrington said it's not enough to think about diversity as solely consisting of race and gender. Inclusion includes groups that are often not thought about.

"We have sensory rooms for people and parents of children who may be on the spectrum and need less stimulation in the airport," said Harrington. "People contribute when they feel respected and valued."

Even the executive director of the airport authority is Cuban American.

Not many minority leaders in similar roles are within the aviation field.

The main speaker for the AMA event was Karrah Herring, chief equity, inclusion, and opportunity officer (CEIOO) for Indiana appointed by Governor Eric Holcomb.

"I didn't want my job. I don't think anyone would choose to do this work in this climate. Unfortunately, my purpose isn't always my preference," said Herring to the room.

She said people often want to run away from diversity and equity, but it's her duty to make sure that people understand on a deeper level the impact it has.

She said it's imperative that people see that the work isn't performative because of its importance.

As CEIOO, she said her office has accomplished numerous feats within the statehouse, like launching the Pathways to Purpose Interns program and the equity data portal 2.0 and giving quarterly reports for the Central Indiana Small Business Development Center.

A part of her external engagement is making sure diversity and inclusion are being considered around the state.

The office conducted a climate survey with 11,515 business participants, which make up 37% of the state workforce.

State scores from that survey showed that almost 60% of companies exhibited inclusive leadership and 76% had inclusive managers.

"You can have varying perspectives where everyone is valued and heard," said Herring.

Her speech gave companies advice on how to be more authentic and engaging with their audiences.

Something Girton appreciated because of how he's seen a lot of inauthentic entities operate.

"Not only is it great for us to have these kinds of conversations, but it's important to remember the history that we have to now fix because we communicated narratives that were not inclusive," said Girton.

He said diversity and inclusion aren't a tagline for companies, it's a tool.

"It's about positivity," Rising entrepreneur shares experience

By KAMYA WILLIAMS
kamyaw@indyrecorder.com

Deven Fuqua is no stranger to entrepreneurship. From a young age, Fuqua remembers seeing his parents start their own business which ultimately inspired him to start KETCH, the clothing company.

The name "KETCH" stands for "Keep Elevating Through Challenging Hardships." This is a motto Fuqua has continued to use throughout his life.

Fuqua was inspired to start his business by his pastor.

"My pastor always preaches about elevating through tough times, and it's always been something that has just stuck with me," he said.

Fuqua is a freshman at IUPUI majoring in accounting. Unlike many of his friends who go out often to play basketball or hang out around each other, in his free time, he finds his happy place designing new clothes.

Fuqua recently received second runner up in his school's Diversity, Enrichment, and Achievement Program (DEAP) GEICO pitch competition. Students were given the opportunity to pitch a business idea to a panel.

Even though KETCH is a new brand, Fuqua recalls how the business stems all the way back into his childhood.

"It actually started way back when my dad would call me 'Ketch' because I loved ketchup so much," Fuqua said, smiling.

Fuqua is passionate about social justice and sees himself as a light for his community. He is an active member of his college and participates heavily in many social justice activities on campus.

"My biggest goal for this company is for people to see black people differently," Fuqua said.

Fuqua plans to give back to the community through his business. In the future as his business grows, he intends to give a portion of his profits to local nonprofit organizations as well as provide products for homeless individuals.

"Thats what I've been taught growing up, always give back, so I'll continue to do that as I get older," he said.

Zachary Wise is a frequent customer of KETCH who appreciates the feeling he gets when wearing the brand.

"The hoodie makes me feel good, not only the material, but the meaning behind the hoodie is the part I really love," Wise said.

"KETCH is a day-to-day thing, it's about positivity," Fuqua said.

Over the past few years there have been undeniable increases in the cost of the paper, yet our company has absorbed the costs without increasing rates. A Perfectly Dreamy Dessert

(Culinary.net)

Some desserts deliver sweet taste that satisfies taste buds while others provide a rich flavor that lingers long after you've finished that last delicious bite. When you're pondering which type of dessert you'd like to make at home, it may be difficult to decide which direction to take.

Instead of making that nearly impossible decision, keep in mind you can have the best of both worlds with this Chocolate Caramel Peanut Butter Pie. On top of the hard-to-beat flavor, this recipe requires a short list of ingredients and limited time in the kitchen for an easy-to-make treat to satisfy your loved ones' dessert desires.

Just mix together cream cheese, powdered sugar, peanut butter, milk and whipped topping before layering together in a graham cracker crust that adds just enough crunch to the creamy texture. Top with chocolate chips and drizzle with chocolate and caramel syrups before freezing, serving and putting smiles on all the faces in the room.

Fun Easter 'Egg-turnatives'

4 creative alternatives to decorating eggs this Easter

(Family Features)

While decorating eggs for Easter is a tradition that dates back centuries, the high cost of eggs may make it more difficult for some families this year. However, that doesn't mean you can't find creative ways to keep the season special and create memories with loved ones.

With more than 140 years of experience, the Easter egg decorating experts at PAAS® are sharing some ideas and inspiration on fun things to do with your Easter decorating kit. These "egg-citing" alternatives to using traditional eggs can help keep those simple moments of connection and creativity alive:

Pretty in Plastic

Dyeing plastic eggs is an activity perfect for all ages with less stress and less mess since they don't crack or break when dropped. Dyeable plastic eggs also typically come in packages of more than a traditional dozen, offering more opportunities for creativity. Another added bonus: You can decorate your home every year with the finished product since they don't go bad. They are also perfect for DIY projects, such as making them into garland, hanging ornaments, place settings or gifts that can be used for years to come.

Baked Easter Decor

Instead of buying eggs, you can make your own baking soda dough eggs using 1/2 cup corn starch, 1 cup baking soda and 3/4 cup water. Combine the ingredients, roll into egg shapes and bake in the oven for 1 hour at 175 F then simply dye them as you would real eggs using your favorite PAAS egg decorating kit. Fun for all ages, these eggs can be turned into a variety of decor and mementos with kids taking the lead on mixing the dough batter and shaping the eggs before an adult helps with the baking.

Creative Kitchen Canvases

Coffee filters are good for more than just making coffee; they make perfect canvases for Easter decorating and naturally take dye. With 100-250 coffee filters per package, they're a cost-effective way to maximize crafting opportunities and let creativity run wild. Once dyed and dried, you can turn the filters into flower centerpieces, papier mache eggs, artwork to frame and more.

Repurposed Treasure from Nature

Kids often love to hunt for fun-shaped and colorful rocks when exploring outdoors or collect seashells while on vacation or taking a walk on the beach. Now, rather than storing them in a "treasure box" or throwing them back outside, they can be creatively decorated for Easter using paint, stickers, glitter, accessories and other add-ons. Some seashells can even be dyed. Using rocks and shells of all shapes and sizes is a cost-effective, low-waste alternative that allows children to use their imaginations for creative play once they're done decorating.

Sustainable Tips to Avoid Egg Waste

If you plan to keep the tradition of dyeing eggs alive this year, you can take steps to avoid food waste once you're done decorating. Consider these sustainable tips from the experts at PAAS:

Make Deviled Eggs: As long as you refrigerate the eggs shortly after dyeing them, you can use them to make deviled eggs – an Easter brunch staple – for your family meal.

Create Centerpieces: Dyed eggs can be used to make a beautiful centerpiece for your family dinner. Simply spread them over your table runner around other decor, fill a glass bowl or jar with the eggs or place them within a floral arrangement to add pops of color to the table.

Serve a Salad: Eating the eggs saves you from food waste, and eggs can be used in a variety of salads, including egg salad, potato salad or chef's salad, to add a boost of protein and flavor.

Start a Compost Pile: If you don't plan to eat the eggs once you're done decorating, you can create a compost pile near your garden. Hard-boiled eggshells are a rich source of calcium and other essential nutrients plants need.

The road to LSU's first national title in school history

By Noral Parham III
noralp@indyrecorder.com

The banner has finally made its way to the bayou and the gold now belongs to the swamps. Louisiana State University dominated the Iowa Lady Hawkeyes in a 102-85 victory.

However, to understand the magnitude of securing their first national title, one must go back a few years. Let's take a look at the acquisition of hometown hero Kim Mulkey.

In 2021, LSU signed hall of fame coach Kim Mulkey to an eight-year deal worth approximately $3 million a year. From 2000-2021, Mulkey coached many legendary Baylor lineups. The results were fifteen coach of the year awards, three championships, and a legendary 40-0 season in 2011-12.

Although Mulkey is regarded as one of the greatest coaches since the legendary Pat Summitt, her colorful media takes and outfits have made her one of the most divisive coaches of the last twenty years.

Many remember Mulkey for her complicated relationship with Phoenix Mercury star Britney Griner. Mulkey was vocal on Griner 'downplaying' her sexuality while playing for the religious institution Baylor. Griner did not receive the advice well, ultimately damaging their relationship to this day.

Mulkey was also an outstanding guard during her playing days at Louisiana Tech. From 1980 until 1984, she made quite a name for herself. She was a two-time academic all-American and helped secure a national title for Louisiana Tech in 1982. Mulkey finished her playing career with a phenomenal 130-6 record. She is also the first person in NCAA history, male or female, to secure a national title as an assistant coach, head coach, and player.

With such a prestigious background and unique approach to meshing (or not) with future hall of fame bigs such as Britney Griner, the next piece of the LSU title hopes lay within the Bayou Barbie: Angel Reese.

Originally, Reese was quite the standout at Maryland. However, it would not be evident until her second sophomore season. Reese played 32 games, starting in 31, where she averaged 18 points and 10.6 rebounds. The 6'3 forward was also a defensive terror, averaging nearly two steals and one block a game.

Reese decided to leave the program after experiencing a freshman campaign overshadowed by injuries and a sophomore 'slump.'

Angel Reese joined Mulkey in 2022, averaging a career-high 23 points per game and fifteen rebounds a contest. Reese's efforts earned her a spot as the fifth-best scorer and second-best rebounder this season.

Reese would go on to achieve 34 double-doubles, breaking Courtney Paris' record that held firm for nearly 18 years.

Reese and Mulkey are key cogs in LSU obtaining their first national title in program history. However, they are not the only primary factors. Other key contributors included Jasmine Carson, Kateri Poole, Alexis Morris, of course, 'The Big Four' herself: Flau'jae Johnson.

The freshman guard Flau'jae Johnson and Coach Mulkey are a match made in media heaven. Between Mulkey's trendy outfits and Johnson's charisma, the two are always worth pressing the record button to see what happens next.

With the pieces in place, it was time for the final bout: No.3 seed LSU vs. No.2 seed Iowa.

The fanatics would not reveal themselves until the second quarter. The Lady Tigers outscored the Lady Hawkeyes in the second period by a 12-point margin. By the final quarter, LSU was firing on all cylinders, especially Jasmine Carson who rained three-pointers in clutch seconds of the game.

LSU would accrue the most points in a national title game history.

In legendary Coach Mulkey fashion, caught in her signature crouch on the sidelines, tears of joy began to flow. With only seconds away from securing a national title, Mulkey would be the first person Johnson embraced, twirling her coach around in an exuberant fashion.

"It's emotional, and I am so happy. I don't know how to explain it's just deep gratitude and happiness," said Coach Mulkey. "Nowhere did it say National Champions (in LSU's program history), and that's what I came home to do.

IU Soul Revue Brings Soul Music to The Jazz Kitchen

On Sunday, March 26, there was a different sort of vibe at The Jazz Kitchen, Indy's premier jazz club and restaurant. The IU Soul Revue, a student group from Indiana University-Bloomington, took the stage for its premier performance before a sold-out crowd at 6 o'clock that evening. Hosted by Indy's Hot 100.9's DJ B Swift, Soul Revue featured well-dressed and coordinated male, female, and mixed vocal groups, a dynamic horn section, and one of the tightest rhythm sections you've ever heard. The show consisted of the group's usual repertoire of R&B, soul, funk, and contemporary Black popular music. The audience was wowed with songs by popular artists of today, like Silk Sonic – "Love's Train," Lizzo - "About Damn Time," and some from the back in the day: Minnie Ripperton – "Memory Lane," Bobby Brown – "Don't Be Cruel," Earth, Wind and Fire – "September." Expanding its repertoire into smooth jazz, the band was featured on Chris Botti's "Venice," highlighted by excellent trumpet and flugel horn improvisations. Packed with alumni, parents, and friends, the audience grooved with heads bobbing, feet patting, and gave several standing ovations, making comments like "wow," "amazing."

Established on the IU Bloomington campus in 1971, the "Revue" presented its 50th Anniversary Concert last April at the historic Madame C.J. Walker Theatre. "Indianapolis is like a second home for the Revue," says Indianapolis native and IU Soul Revue alum James A. Strong. Strong held a successful career as a bassist and music director for a list of artists, including Stephanie Mills and LL Cool J.

Amongst the Revue's distinguished alumni are Donna Taylor (long-time backup singer for Burt Bacharach), Crystal Taliefero (vocalist, saxophonist, and percussionist with Billy Joel), Lance Tolbert (keyboardist and bassist with Mariah Carey, and Charlie Wilson), and Indianapolis-born Keith Richards and Kevon Edmonds of the group, After 7.

The Revue has wowed hundreds of fans across the nation from New York – L.A., and has shared the stage with, two- time Grammy nominee/two-time ASCAP award songwriter Terry Steele. The group has opened for a slate of renowned artists such as James Brown, Con Funk Shun, and the Emotions and served as the band for funk legend Bootsy Collins at the renowned Cincinnati Music Festival. The IU Soul Revue was highly recognized for its dedication to R&B by Indianapolis native and multi-Grammy-winning Kenneth "Babyface" Edmonds who received an Honorary Doctorate at Indiana University.

The IU Soul Revue is one of three ensembles managed by the African American Arts Institute, a unit of the Office of the Vice President for Diversity, Equity, and Multicultural Affairs at Indiana University Bloomington. The ensemble is offered to students for academic credit through IU's Department of African American and African Diaspora Studies. Check out the Revue's spring concert on April 22, 2023 at the Buskirk-Chumley Theater in Bloomington (https://buskirkchumley.org/event/iu_soul_revue_spring_concert/). Indycar delivers at Texas

By Danny Bridges

Josef Newgarden is used to close finishes at Texas Motor Speedway. After all, last year he snatched a victory away from his Penske Racing teammate Scott McLaughlin on the last lap, so it came as no surprise he was able to hold off both Pato O'Ward and Alex Palou on the last stint to win the PPG 375 on a day when the series reminded us of how exciting the racing can be on this bullring of a track.

"We were getting beat significantly at the midway point today" stated Newgarden who won for the twenty-sixth time in his Indycar career, piloting his Chevrolet powdered Dallara to victory lane for his third Texas win.

"The initial changes l called for on the car were in fact not what we needed, and my crew did a great job of sorting things out, giving me a great car from that point on."

The field experienced increased tire grip due to the erosion of the PJ1 compound that was previously applied to the racing surface in an attempt to enhance the Nascar competition at the 1.5 mile track, and coupled with increased downforce provided an additional racing lane allowing for exciting side by side racing, with numerous passes for position throughout the entire day for the field.

Notes: Team McLaren's Pato O'Ward appeared to be on his way once he got out front leading ninety-one laps on the day in route to a runner-up finish. O'Ward also registered the quickest lap of the race when he blistered the track on lap 118 at 221.090.

Ganasdi Racing's Alex Palou rounded out the podium in third place leading twenty-two laps in the highest finishing Honda powered entry.

A total of eight drivers led the race with Newgarden running out front for nearly half the event which unfortunately for those in attendance featured fifty-two caution laps stemming from five accidents.

Seven drivers finished on the lead lap in a race that had twenty-six lead changes and an average speed of 169.917.

O'Ward now leads the Series point standings with Marcus Ericsson in second followed by Scott Dixon, Newgarden, and Palou rounding out the top five after two rounds of racing.

The next stop for the NTT Indy Car Series is April 16 when the Acura Grand Prix of Long Beach unfolds in California.

You can watch the legendary street course event on NBC at 3 p.m. Eastern time or by tuning in to the IMS Radio Network.

Tune in to Community Connection with Tina Cosby at 1310 AM or 92.7 FM every Thursday at 2:30 as we talk Indy Car, Colts, Pacers while of course taking your calls.

Pacers eliminated from playoffs, best takeaways this season

BY NORAL PARHAM III

Well, that's all she wrote for the Indiana Pacers this season. The hickory hopefuls have been mathematically eliminated from NBA playoff contention. But let's take a look at some of the best moments of the Pacers' season.

The veteran T.J. McConnell

Many casual fans undervalue the importance of having a positive veteran presence in a team's locker room. However, Pacer fans witnessed the impact of T.J. McConnell first-hand this season.

When starting point guard Tyrese Haliburton missed a handful of games due to injury, McConnell was expected to carry the load. McConnell averaged 8.5 points, 5 assists, and 3 rebounds per game while Haliburton was active. With Haliburton sidelined, T.J. McConnell's numbers skyrocketed to 14 points, 8 assists, and 4.5 rebounds. McConnell was also the key factor in the Pacers' victory over the Oklahoma City Thunder on March 31.

In a news conference after the Thunder game, Pacers coach Rick Carlisle praised McConnell for his pesky defense and gritty playing style, saying "he just had the motor running" and that McConnell was the key "facilitator on offense."

Myles Turner's return

For the past few seasons, Pacers big man Myles Turner has been a subject of trade talks, holdout conspiracies, and even of possible retirement. This season, however, Turner came back healthier than before. He played in 62 games this season, averaging 18 points, 7.5 rebounds, and nearly 2.5 blocks per game. Pacers fans were heartbroken with the departure of Domantas Sabonis because Turner's health had been in question for the past few seasons. However, Turner's ferocious defense, rim protection, and ability to stretch the floor (albeit inconsistently) kept the playoff hopes alive for the Pacers on more than one occasion. Fans witnessed him do it for almost an entire season in a respectable fashion.

Drafting Benedict Mathurin

The second-greatest moment of the season was the team drafting Benedict Mathurin during the 2022 NBA Draft even before the season started back in November. Mathurin has been a breakout star and Rookie of the Year hopeful, averaging 16.6 points per game on 56.6% true shooting.

Acquisition of Tyrese Haliburton

Since joining the Pacers near the end of last season, Haliburton has shown himself to be a facilitating marvel this year. Currently, Haliburton averages nearly 21 points, 4 rebounds, and a league-leading 10 assists per game. Haliburton also received his first all-star selection in February.

Handful of Picks

The Pacers also hold multiple draft picks. In recent years, the Pacers have turned draft picks into players such as Benedict Mathurin, Andrew Nembhard, and Chris Duarte. With first-round draft picks from the Cleveland Cavaliers and Boston Celtics as well as second-rounders from the Houston Rockets, the Pacers have a realistic chance of securing more generational talent in the draft this June.

Pacers fans are looking forward to the team being a playoff contender within the next two seasons.

Indians lose 8-6 in season opener

BY NORAL PARHAM III

On the opening day of the minor league season last weekend, the Indianapolis Indians rushed Victory Field to face the Omaha Storm Chasers.

In the bottom of the first, Endy Rodriguez beams a homer on a fly ball that cuts right through center field. This would be the Indianapolis Indians' first home run of the season. Malcom Nunez and Tucupita Marcano would rack up three RBIs combined to bring the score 5-0 at the close of the first inning.

The Omaha Storm Chasers would not respond until the fifth inning. Maikel Garcia provides a unique sacrifice fly that brings Dairon Blanco around to home plate.

The Storm Chasers would begin brewing something at the top of the seventh. Samad Taylor hits a triple on a fly ball that allowed Tucker Bradley to score. Maikel Garcia would return with a single that brought Taylor around home. This would make the score 5-3 Indians.

Omaha would close the gap in the next inning. Maikel Garcia recorded an RBI off of a walk, making the score 5-4 Indians. In the bottom of the same inning, Nunez knocks a single, bringing Chavez Young home safely. Indians lead 6-4.

The final inning is where everything would change. Freddy Fermin recorded an RBI, allowing Tyler Gentry to score. Storm Chasers are now down a single run. Tucker Bradley logged an RBI-generating walk, tying the score 6-6.

Up next was Taylor, who was responsible for some heroics in the seventh inning. Thanks to Taylor's single on a fly ball to left, the Omaha Storm Chasers would gain the lead, 8-6.

The Indians were unable to respond at the bottom of the final inning. Fans were not happy about the late-game collapse, considering a 5-0 start in the first.

However, there is a litany of games left in the season. As long as the Indians keep the high-velocity innings in the first half of games while playing respectable defense in the latter half, then this team could go a long way.
